O V. I D'S METAMORPHOSIS TRANSLATED By Several Hands

P

W 8 19-8

Ahh. 622

OVID's

METAMORPHOSIS.

TRANSLATED

By Several Hands.

VOL. I.

Containing the first Five Books.

Adozn'd with Sculptures.

LONDON:

Printed for III. Rogers at the Sun in Fleetftreet; ff. Sanders in the New Exchange; and A. Roper at the Black Boy against St. Dunstan's Church. 1697.

O.V. D.s

METALIORPHOSIS.

By Sectoral Hands

Containing the first Five Books

492:14 1700704

Linted for T.d. Moger's at the Sun in Elect.

Letter; J. Schitzer's in the New Exclusive; and R. Kerrer or the Pair Boy against

See Curifum i Charch. 1097.

this had been and The Opportunity; but led with the Right Honourable and

WILLIAM

EARL of PORTLAND, &c.

o...defined to the friedlen.

MY LORD,

WERE I as capable as I have long been ambitious of Addressing to Your Lordship in A 3

The Epistle Dedicatory.

fo worthy a manner as You deserve, this had been a fair Opportunity; but I must confess my self unable to come up to fo Great a Character.

I am sensible what Encomiums are due to uncommon Merit. To behold Exemplary Virtue at Court; an Active Life adjusted by strictest Regularity; Sedateness of Temper amidst the hurry of most Important Affairs; High Station and Greatness accompanied not only with exacteft Justice, but likewise with Condescention,

t

f

is

C

a

a

F

5

h

1

N

g

The Epiftle Dedicatory.

tion, Affability and Courtefy to Inferiours; and all this resulting from a fix'd Sense of Honour; and what is yet Greater, from an Inbred Principle of Religion and Piety--- These are Topicks that would employ the ablest Genius to describe them in Persection.

But the I cannot pretend to write Your Lordship's just Praises; yet I hope I may be allowed to offer the Tribute of my Thanks. Every honest Man has a Right of speaking his grateful Sentiments of a Publick Be-A 4 nefactor.

ty; able ve,

are old

an ₹eper ant iess test

on,

The Epiftle Dedicatory.

Acknowledgments are due to Your Lordship for the Great Services in which you are perpetually employed. Nay, the Good Men of all Nations are oblig'd to You upon Account of your Early and Continued Fidelity to the Best of Princes.

He has always thought Your Lordship worthy of his nearest Trust; and tis your Honour and Happiness to have been more than once particularly Instrumental in the Preservation of his Sacred Life, upon which the Welfare

The Epifile Dedicatory.

nal

our

in ed.

nş

of ty ur

ft;

es

un

10

re

Welfare of Europe so much depends. This, My LORD, has gain'd You the Esteem of this Age, and will celebrate your Name to All Posterity.

But Zeal has infensibly transported me beyond my Design, which was only to crave Your Lordship's Patronage of the following Poem, the Performance of Several Hands. Nor can I despair of Your Lordship's Favour, when I consider that Persons in highest Stations and Employments, have condescended to Patronize the

The Epistle Dedicatory.

the Muses. I therefore beg leave to lay this Essay at Your Lordship's Feet, and to profess my Self with the most profound Respect and Sincerity,

MY LORD,

Your Lordship's

Most Humble

and most Devoted Servant,

N. TATE.

PREFACE.

to ip's ith

in-

OME of our greatest Judges of Poetry have declared their Sentiments of this Author, That he is the fittest amongst the Classick Poets to be Translated into English. Indeed he is so Natural a Writer, that he cannot fail of being agreeable in any Language he shall be made to speak. Humane Passions are the same in all Ages and Countries; and, perhaps, no man had ever the Talent of touching them so sensibly as Himself. But it will still be a Question with some Persons, what need there was of any new Performance after what Mr. Sandy's has done, with so long and general Approbation. I confess confess it is a kind of Sacriledge to rob the Dead of their just Praises: And for my own part, must acknowledge, I think him a Great Man. Nay, 'tis my Opinion', that fcarce any Person now living would have perform'd so well in fo narrow a Compass. But with his strict Confinement be is thought (even by good Judg: ments) to have loft much of that Beauty and Grace, which, without doubt, he would otherwife have reach'd. So that the noblest Parts of the Work feem not rais'd to that degree above the Rest that is Conspicuous in the Original; where the labour d Places are distinguishable, and where the Poet has manifestly exerted his utmost Faculties. A modest latitude seems neceffary for any one that Translates from a more Comprehensive Language than his own. Nor can it be expected that an English Verse of Ten Syllables

Syll com abr

fion

then cife ber

Tr

the thi

Fin

for 601 be n

1t

ly ll

Ŧ

Syllables should always take in a Latin Verse of commonly Fisteen, or more, without being cramp'd, abrupt, and obscure. At least, where the Passions are to be wrought, they can never express them with due tenderness and delicacy in so concise a way. This is the prudent and decent Liberty which I presume has been taken by the Translators concerned in this Version, but with what Success, must be left to the Judgment of the Reader. As for the Method of publishing this Work by single Volumes, (each containing Five Books of the whole Fisteen) the Booksellers thought it most proper at this time.

The Two remaining Volumes are preparing for the Press, and will be Published with all convenient Speed.

confess it is a kind of Sacriledge to rob the Dead of their just Praises: And for my own part, must acknowledge, I think him a Great Man. Nay, 'tis my Opinion', that scarce any Person now living would have perform'd so well in fo warrow a Compass. But with his strict Confinement be is thought (even by good Judgs ments) to have loft much of that Beduty and Grace, which, without doubt, he would other-Dife have reach'd. So that the nobleft Parts of the Work feem not raisd to that degree above the Rest that is Conspicuous in the Original; where the tabour'd Places are diftinguishable, and where the Poet has manifestly exerted his utmost Faculties. A modest latitude seems nedeffary for any one that Translates from a more Comprehensive Language than his own. Nor can it be expected that an English Verse of Ten

10/100

Syl con abr

fion

the cife

ber wl

the

th

 $F_i$

the

for

be

m at ny

:ll

æ

4 d

A

3

Syllables should always take in a Latin Verse of commonly Fifteen, or more, without being cramp'd. abrupt, and obscure. At least, where the Passions are to be wrought, they can never express them with due tenderness and delicacy in so concife a way. This is the prudent and decent Liberty which I presume has been taken by the Translators concerned in this Version, but with what Success, must be left to the Judgment of the Reader. As for the Method of publishing this Work by single Volumes, (each containing Five Books of the whole Fifteen) the Booksellers thought it most proper at this time.

The Two remaining Volumes are preparing for the Press, and will be Published with all convenient Speed.

BOOK

The PREEMOD

Syllables from disting and were were it in the company of the same of the same of the same chrups, and obligate. The above we Cales

Seems are to be appointed that the seems of the small energy of course have a selected the line mode cife a may. This is the fredom and about the borty which I pieling I is been sayed by the Translates enterned in the Perfore, I'm with white Society mays be believe the for encircles the Realer. In Section Method of pullifying this Burk in South Volumes, (each containing Hve Dooks of the intole Hiscen) the two sellers thought it mast proper as this time.

The The rengining Volumes are proparing for the P. 18, and will be Publiffer with all convenient Social

Tr

By

By

BOOK I.

Translated by Mr. Milbourn.

Syl

con

16,3 fron

cods

cife

ber Tr

22 sil

odi

BOOK II.

By Mr. Arwaker and Mr. Jackson.

воок III.

By Mr. Pittis and Mr. Bridgwater.

BOOK IV.

To Page 166. by Mr. Tate. Continued to Page 175. by Mr. Arwaker. From thence to Page 183. by Mr. Tate. To the End, by Another Hand.

BOOK V.

By Mr. Wells and Mr. Smith.

OVID'S METAMORPHOSIS.

The FIRST BOOK.

The Argument of the First Book.

The Author's Invocation, and Design of the whole Work. The Chaos described. The Separation of the four Elements. Creation of Man. Production of Giants. Lycaon's Impiety, and Jupiter's Resolution thereupon to drown the whole Earth.
Description of the Flood. Deucalion and Phyrra only survive : Who by direction of the Oracle restore the Race of Mankind. Other Creatures produc'd from the Heat and Mois flure of the Earth. Among t which the Serpent Pytho, whom Apollo kills; and thereupon institutes the Pythian Games ! in which Exercises the Victors are crown'd with Oaken Wreath, the Laurel-Tree being not yet produced, till the Transformation of Daphne into that Plant. On which Oce casion ber Father Peneus (a River-God) is visued by other River-Detties. Inachus only absent , detain'd by Grief for bis Daughter Io's being chang'd into a Heifer by Juno, who (Suspecting the Intrigue) commits ber to the Custody of Argus; whom Mercury circumvents, and kills, having first charm'd his bundred Eyes asleep, by singing to his Reed the Transformation of Syrinx. Juno, after the Death of Argus

The Control of the Land of the

OVID'S METAMORPHOSIS.

The FIRST BOOK.

The Argument of the First Book.

The Author's Invocation, and Design of the whole Work. The Chaos describ'd. The Separation of the four Elements. Creation of Man. Production of Giants. Lycaon's Impiety, and Jupiter's Resolution thereupon to drown the whole Earth. Description of the Flood. Deucalion and Phyrra only survive: Who by direction of the Oracle restore the Race of Mankind. Other Creatures produc'd from the Heat and Moiflure of the Earth. Among f which the Serpent Pytho, whom Apollo kills, and thereupon institutes the Pythian Games ; in which Exercises the Victors are crown'd with Oaken Wreaths, the Laurel-Tree being not yet produced, till the Transformation of Daphne into that Plant. On which Occasion ber Father Peneus (a River-God) is visited by other River-Detties. Inachus only absent, detain'd by Grief for bis Daughter Io's being chang'd into a Heifer by Juno, who (Suspecting the Intrigue) commits her to the Custody of Argus; whom Mercury circumvents, and kills, having first charm'd his bundred Eyes asleep, by singing to his Reed the Transformation of Syrinx. Juno, after the Death of Argus, transplants bis Eyes into ber Peacock's Tail. Io being restor'd to ber former Shape, is deliver'd of Epaphus. His Contest with Phaeton.

F Bodies chang'd to other Shapes I fing; Ye Gods who chang'd them, fuch affistance bring,

That in one equal Stream my Versemay flow, (below. Down from the World's first Birth to our great Age

Before Earth, Seas, or Heavins wide Arch were fram'd;
One heavy shapeless Lump, the Chaos nam'd,
O'respread the face of Nature; where around Rude indigested Principles were found
Of suture things; No Sun yet shew'd his Light,
Nor waxing Moon with borrow'd Lustre bright.
No Earth in Ambient Air true ballanc't hung,
Nor Seas their watry Arms around it slung;
But Sea, Earth, Air, all jumbled, all confus'd;
No solid Earth, no fluid Waves produc'd;
No lightsome Air; but strugling Atoms jarr'd
In the rude Mass; the Soft assault the Hard,

The

T

A

A

F

T

A

In H

A

T

G

A

L

F

H

T

N

. Iô Epa-

affilow.

Arch

ht.

The Hot the Cold, the Moist oppose the Dry;
And Light with Heavy parts for Conquest try:
God by a gentler Nature husti'd the Fray,
And from the upper Skies took Earth away;
From Barth drew off the Seas, and parted fair
The Liquid Æther from the Cloudy Air,
And bound them, parted from the gloomy Mass,
In peaceful bonds, each in a distant place.
High o'er the rest the weightless Æther stew,
And o'er the rest Heav'ns azure Arches drew.
The Air, as next in Lightness, next was plac'd;
Gross Earth the Seeds of heavier things embrac'd,
And sunk with its own weight; the waters last
Like some strong Girdle round the Globe were cast.

Thus fome Almighty God his Power disclos'd,
And the rough Mass in various parts dispos'd:
First, lest the heavier parts, ill pois'd, should fall,
He roll'd 'um up in one terraqueous Ball;
Then narrower Seas dispers'd, and bad 'um roar
With rapid Winds, and wash the neighbouring Shore:

The

And

And Springs, and mighty Pools, and Lakes he made, And Rivers down through winding Banks convey'd:

Some swallow'd up in parent Barth; but some,
With Streams encreas'd, down to the Ocean come;
Where, in large Fields of spacious Waters, lost,
They not on Banks, but Shores, are roughly tost.
His Word sunk Valleys, plain'd the verdant Meads,

Rais'd leavy Woods, and Rocky Mountain Heads.
And as five Zones the higher Orbs divide,
Two always bending to the Northern fide,
Two to the Southern Pole, the fifth between,
Glowing and hot with nearer Beams is feen:
So that Wife God th' included Earth dispos'd,
And the hot Clime between the Mild enclos'd.
The midmost scorch't, one room thy Desert makes,
Th' Extremes are chill'd with the continual stakes'
Of lasting Snows: Between these, two more mild,
Where Heat and Cold are gently reconcil'd.

These all invelop'd with expanded Air Compos'd of fluid Atoms, but more rare

Than

Th

Th

Th

And

Th

An

But

In

Wh

Tu

An

Th

By

Th

Th

WI

Clo

Th

TI

Than their original Moisture, and less light
Than soaring stame in its superior slight;
There he soft Dews and heavy Clouds display'd,
And there his dismal treasur'd Thunders laid:
There yet unforg'd and forceless Lightnings ly,
And Meteors blaze, and fanning Breezes ply:
But the great Architect the head strong Winds
In narrow Bounds from long'd-for mischief binds;
Whence, when they sometimes break, they rake the Turn up tall Groves, and lofty Buildings tear; (Air,
And tho in distant Caves (like Captives) hurl'd,
The quarrelling Brood shake all the trembling World.

The East bore down to th' Equinoctial dawn,
By Persian and Arabian Odors drawn;
The Western to the falling Sun inclin'd;
The Frozen Pole secur'd the Northern Wind;
While the damp South winds slabby Pinions roll
Clouds ever-showry from the adverse Pole.
Then he commands, That o're 'um all should rife
The sluid Arch of dregless weightless Skies.

B 3

Scarce

s' ild,

an ces, nade:

con-

me ;

dant

ds.

Scarce had he thus to each their Bounds affign'd,
When long-hid Stars with sudden lustre shin'd
Above; and lest some place should vacant ly,
Celestial Signs and Damons fill the Sky;
Bright Fish the Water, Earth its Beasts maintains,
And moving-Air to light wing'd Birds remains.

A Nobler Creature, of a larger Soul, Was wanting yet, whose Sense might All controul; So Man was made; whether the World's great Caufe Th'Almighty Workman by peculiar Laws From heavenly Seeds produc'd his heavenly Form; Or Earth, ftill with Æthereal Atoms warm, New made, and parted from its kindred Sky, Made wife Promet bens all his Judgment try, Temper and work, and mould it like a God. And while all other Creatures where they trod, Fixt their dejected looks, a Nobler Air He gave to Man, and a superior Care; And bad him boldly view the spacious Skies, And toward the Stars raife his exalted Eyes : Thus rough ill-figue'd Barth, transform'd again, Put on the various unknown shapes of Men.

First

Of

M

A

N

N

A

N

N

N

B

L

N

N

N

B

First was the Golden Age, when, far from fear Of angry Judges, or of Laws fevere, Men of their own accord All acted right, And Truth and Justice was the World's delight; No Penal Laws on Brazen Leaves were grav'd; No Criminal his Judge's Favour crav'd; A Judge's Place no mighty Bribes obtain'd, Nor Men their Rights by Fees or Councel gaind; None yet from Mountains hal'd the lofty Trees; No Ships were built to cross the dreadful Seas: But all, contented with their Native Shore, Liv'd quiet there, and wish'd to know no more. No Trench nor Walls their fearless Cities crown'd None trembled at the Trumpet's Martial Sound. No Casks nor Swords were made, nor Soldiers train'd.

uins.

oul:

aufe

rm;

Ari

But downy Peace thro'all the Nations reign'd.

Earth now, untouch'd, her Stores at large bestow'd,

Not torn with Harrows, nor with Coulters plow'd.

And Men with unforc't Natures Fruits content,

To Shrubs and Hills for Sloes and Bullice went;

B 4

On

On Blackberries and Hurtle-berries fed,
And Mast from spreading Oaks in plenty shed.
Twas always Spring, and Western Breezes round
The unsown Meads with Flow'ry Garlands crown'd:

The Earth, untill'd, it's weighty Crops could yield, And heavy Ears wav'd o're the burthen'd Field; The largest streams with Milk and Nectar flow'd, And dropping Boughs their Virgins Sweets bestow'd.

But Saturn, thrust to Hell, soon less the Stage;
Jove seiz'd the Throne, and rais'd the Silver Age,
Low-priz'd, compar'd with that of Gold before;
With that of Brass compar'd, esteem'd the more.
Then Jove contracts those old eternal Springs,
And all the Year to equal Quarters brings:
A short-liv'd Spring, a short-liv'd Summer breeds;
Uncertain Harvests, Winter's cold succeeds:
Then first the Air with scorching Fervours glow'd,
And Wind-bound Floods an Icy Surface show'd;
Then Men, first pinch'd abroad, for shelter sought,
And to some spacious Cave their Housholds brought;
Or

Or v The And

Or in

Mo

Yet

No

And

An

And (A

Sea

Hu

TI

T

Or in some thick-leav'd Copses took the shade,
Or with Boughs ty'd, convenient Arbours made;
Then Corn was first in long-drawn Furrows sown,
And heavy Yokes made labouring Oxen groan.

ds

ld,

c-

s

The third, the Brazen Age, assum'd the place, More prone to Quarrels, and a siercer Race.

Yet not beyond all bounds of Virtue past.

Hard stubborn temper'd Iron form'd the last.

Now Villany broke in, like some vast Flood, And poyson'd all Mankind's corrupted Blood;

Faith, Truth, and Modesty, were forc'd to sty, And Fraud, and Falshood, Lies and Treachery, And cursed thirst for Wealth, ne're satisfied,

(A sad exchange!) their empty Rooms supplied.

Seamen to unknown Winds now spread their Sails, And Lives adventur'd on uncertain Gales;

Huge Ships, whose sides had long the Mountains crown'd,

Their wondrous Courfe through untri'd Waters found.

The Fields, which like the Sun and Air, before
Were common, now were measured nicely o're:

The

The wife Surveyor, Bounds and Land-marks fets. But the Earth duly paid her ancient Debts Of Corn and Food, down deep to Styx below, With hellish Art th' insatiate Miners go; Her Bowels rack'd to find the glittering Ore, With horrid Groans she yields the fatal Store, Mischievous Steel, and more mischievous Gold, Now walk abroad, and bloody War grown bold. Now shakes his well-edg'd Sword and pointed And bloody Stains on all his Arms appear : (Spear, Each Man by Violence and Rapine lives; No fafety to his Guest the Landlord gives; To their Wives Parents falle their Sons are found; And Brothers feldom are for love renown'd. The Man would bury fain his loathforne Wife; And the complains of his too tedious Life: Step mothers all their poys'nous drugs prepare; The Father's Life torments th' impatient Heir: All Duty dies, and weari'd Justice flies From bloody Earth at last, and mounts the Skies.

But that Heav'n might no more of fafety know Than that of our corrupted World below,

Giants

G

T

A

So

T

Giants, it's faid, Heav'ns facred Empire claim'd,
And at the Stars their three-pil'd Mountains aim'd;
Till through Olympus Jove's fierce Lightning broke,
And tumbled Offa with the dreadful stroke
Off Pelion's tow'ring Head; the curst Design
So sunk at once, with all the Gyant-line.
They say, when dead, their monstrous Bodies lay Crusht with their own huge weight; the softning Clay,

Moist with their Blood, a vital warmth conceiv'd:
And lest the World should be at once bereav'd
Of all the Product of that Barbarous Race,
That Clay assum'd a manly Shape and Face:
They too, a Godless, headstrong, murd'ring Crew,
Their bloody Birth by bloody Actions shew.

ted

ar,

its

Jove from above their horrid Crimes survey'd And deeply groan'd, and new Restections made From thence on bold Lycaon's impious Feast; And God-like Anger fill'd his Sacred Breast:

To Council then he summons all the Gods;

Who summon'd, quickly left their blest abodes.

Have you not feen, in cloudless Evening Skies, A lofty Path with wondrous Brightness rife, Thence call'd the Milky-way? That whiteness guides To where th' Immortal Thunderer resides. On either hand of that Illustrious Road, You fee the Castle of some leading God; Some front the Palace of their Mighty King, But leffer gods fill all the distant Ring: This Place, if we by meaner Names might call Cœlestial Buildings, should be Heaven's White-Hall. The Gods here took their Seats; Enthron'd above, On's Ivory Scepter lean'd Imperial Jove; Twice, thrice the Monarch shakes his awful Locks, And Seas, and Earth, and Skies, the Motion shocks: At length the thoughtful God his filence breaks, And thus with a Majestic Anger speaks:

Not greater Cares our anxious Bosom fill'd, Than when the Snake-foot Tribe their Consults held,

On our bright Throne with Rebel-Arms to feize, Than those which now disturb our Sacred Peace. T

B

N

W

B

St

ľ

B

A

W

ľ

B

W

T

B

T

A

V

T

1 les 11.

s,

Then fierce, it's true, and strong the En'my prov'd: But all the War in one huge Body mov'd: Now Vengeance must at once the World enclose. Where e're the founding Ocean's Water flows. By those black Streams, which through the Stygian Steal foftly down, I feal their fatal Doom. (Gloom I've try'd all means to mend the stubborn Crew, But still their Guilt, and still their Crimes renew. And he must cut the tainted Limbs away, Who would with Art the spreading Gangrene stay. I've Demi-gods, Nymphs, Faries, all ador'd By Country-Boors, and Weedy Mountains stor'd With Fauns and Satyrs, these on Earth must live, Till we to them Coeleftial Honours give. But can you, O ye Gods, can you engage, They'll long be fafe, when bold Lycaon's rage Attempted me, me, who fierce Lightnings fling, Whom you thus guard and own your Lawful King?

At this all started, and with ardent Zeal
To Jove's just Vengeance on the Wretch appeal.
So when that impious Band resolv'dly stood
To dash the Roman Name with Casar's Blood, Mankind

Mankind that fatal stroke at once amaz'd,

The World with Horrour on the Murderers gaz'd;

Nor can thy Subjects grief less grateful prove

To great Augustus now, than theirs to Jove.

His Voice and Hand their Loyal Murmurs laid,
And Majesty a general Silence made.
When thus again the Monarch gravely spoke:
Think not a Wretch could thus your King provoke,
And scape unpunish'd! trust that care with me,
And here his Madness and my Vengeance see.

Oft had we heard of Humane Crimes before,
Oft wish'd'em false; but that we might explore
Their truth, our self stoop'd from the peaceful Skies,
And in a Humane Body's dark disguise
Survey'd the World: To cut the Story short,
Mens Crimes far past the loudest Fame's report.
Now Manalus, for Savage Beasts defam'd,
Cyllenus, and the Pinetree Forests nam'd,
From cold Lycaus e're dark Night we past,
And reach'd th' Artadian Tyrant's seat at last;
I let the Croud a Gods arrival know;
The ready Croud their just Devotions show.

Lycaon

Ly W

If

A

T

W

N

Bu

A

D

50

W

I

T

T

T

S

F

¿b's id.

oke,

ies,

Lycaon laught at all, and cry'd aloud, We'll quickly try this great pretended God; If he's a mortal Man, we'll find it out; And if Immortal, foon refolve the doubt; Then he my Death resolv'd, (the surest Test) When fpent with Travel, and with Sleep opprest. Nor could he stay for this decisive Note, But straight he cuts a poor Molossian's Throat, An Hostage from the conquer'd Nation sent; Down to the Fire the quivering Members went, Some roaft, some boil'd; his hateful Table spread. When on its cruel Master's impious Head I turn'd his Palace with revenging Fires; The frighted Wretch to filent Woods retires. And tries to speak, but howls; his threatning Jaws To fnarling Grins his rabid Nature draws; The favage Brute, still ravenous and curst, Against the Cattel turns his sanguine Thirst. His Cloaths rough Hairs, Legs for his Arms he A Wolf, but still his former Visage wears; (bears; Still griefly, and his Looks his Rage proclaim, His bloodshot Eyes and fierceness still the same.

So

So fell one Family; but one alone
Can't for a World's provoking Crimes atone;
In every quarter raging Madness reigns,
And Vice the sworn Society maintains;
Then let them suffer (as they'r guilty) all;
I've past their Doom, and wont the Doom recal.
Some with loud Votes their Monarch's words approve,

And for a sharp and sudden Vengeance move;
Others, with humbly silent Signs consent;
But Mankind's ruins all the Gods lament;
They ask what form the desert World should bear,
Who serve the Gods with due Religious fear;
Should any Incense on their Altars lay?
Or Savage Beasts on every Country prey?

Jove lays their fears, and to their doubts replies,

And tells them, Soon another Stock should rife Unlike the former; from whose wondrous Birth, New Colonies should plant the spacious Earth.

And now Jove had his dismal Lightnings hurld; But that he fear'd his own Superior World; And

Th

Befi Wh Shor

And F

Refo

Shou Strai

And

But g

Mask His I

His th

He fq

traig

That both the Poles the spreading Flames should catch,

And Heaven it felf, as well as Earth, dispatch, Besides, he call'd to mind, Fates time was nigh, When Sea and Earth, and all the losty Sky Should burn with Fire, the World's huge Fabrick And one prodigious Ruin swallow all. (fall, ds

r,

5,

١,

.

Fove throws at last his well-forg'd Lightnings by, Resolv'd he'd other ways of Vengeance try, And drown, not burn the World; and Mortal kind Should all their Graves beneath the Waters find. Straight in his Cave he lock'd the Northern Wind, And all those blasts to clear the Sky design'd; But gives the Southern Wind his liberty:
Out slies the dropping South, his Visage he Masks in a pitchy Gloom, thick Mists around His Beard, his hoary Head with Waters crown'd; His threatning Brows eternal Tempests brew, His Sides and Feathers drop with weighty Dew. He squeez'd the spongy Clouds, the watry Rack Straight pour'd out Rain, with many a dismal erack.

The painted Rainbow mounts the stormy Skies,
And with new Floods the wasted Clouds supplies.
Down falls the Corn, the Plowman's Prayers are crost,

And all the tedious Year's long Labour's lost.
But Rain could ne're Jove's utmost fury vent;
So to his aid his Brother Neptune sent Auxiliary Waves; The Rivers all
At his command the ready Triton's call.
Scarce had they reach'd their King's Imperial Seat,
I shan't, said he, long Arguments repeat;
Go, there's occasion for't, pour all your force;
Give all your Fountains their unbounded Course;
Draw up your Floodgates, all your Barrs remove,
And all your Streams with utmost Rage improve.
He spoke, they homeward turn'd their dabbled Wings,

And straight broke up their inexhausted Springs,
And rush'd with horrid fury towards the Main,
No Banks could their impetuous Rage restrain.
He strikes the Earth, his Trident's dreadful stroke,
New Hollows for the boiling Fountains broke:

Now

N

C

T

R

Bu

A

Or A

W

Ar

Or

Ar

An An

TH

Tt

At

Ru

Ś,

les.

Seat,

urfe:

ove.

ove.

bbled

gs, ī,

1.

oke,

ie:

Now

Now raging Floods at once o'rewhelm the Field, Corn, Trees, Men, Cattel, Houses, Temples yield To their outragious force: If stronger Walls Resist a while, yet such a Tempest falls, They can't long make their bold Resistance good, But lofty Tow'rs sink with the pond'rous Flood.

Now Sea and Earth quite undiffinguish'd lava And all appear'd but one unbounded Sea. One Man here climbs a Hill, another Steers A Boat, and with his active Oars appears Where he himself had plow'd a while before, And views with Tears his rotting Winter's store: One failing spies a stately Village drown'd; Another fishing in an Elm is found: Here in a Plain perhaps an Anchor's cast, And there some Pinnace o're a Vineyard past; And where the Kids in tender Pastures fed, There hideous Sea-Calves now at large are laid. The naked Sea-Nymphs, in a frightful maze, At Groves and Towns beneath the Waters gaze. The Dolphins wilder'd, with an angry stroke Rush on a Bough, or shoot against an Oak.

The

The Wolves, now harmless, swim among the Sheep; The brinded Lyons, floating o're the Deep, Agree with Tygers; Boars their furies lofe; And Fate, more swift, the nimble Deer pursues. The Birds o're toil'd, all hopes of fafety past, Sink down with weari'd Wings, and drown at laft. Hills now are buri'd by the raging Flood; And the victorious Waters grown more proud, The Mountains scale, and o're the Mountains rise; And if still dry some soaring Mountain lies, Pale Famine there the Refugees affails, And with fure arms against their Lives prevails. Baotia, while undrown'd, a fruitful Land, Divided Phocis from th' Actean Strand; Now all those Lands to swelling Oceans yield, All one prodigious Lake, one watry Field. Parnassus there, with two aspiring Heads, The fight above the cloudy Region leads. Deucalion's Skiff, when all the rest was drown'd, Here with his Wife at last a respite found. Here the Corycian Nymphs they both adore,

And both the Mountain Deities implore;

Both

Both

The

Ne'ı

Nor

For

Hoy

And

One

Botl

Set

The

And

The

And

Old

Wh

And

And

AS

Wh

Th

Th

eep; Both to Prophetick Themis Prayers address'd. Themis then of Oracular Power poffes'd. Ne're liv'd a better, juster Man than he; Nor liv'd a Woman more devout then she. Tove, feeing now, from his supreme Abode, How one vast Lake the lower World o'reslow'd, And how one Man of fuch vast Numbers liv'd. One Woman of fuch late huge Crouds furviv'd, Both harmless, both devout; the Clouds dispell'd, Set free the North (fo long a Prisoner held), The Skies again a lightfome Circle made, (play'd. And Earth to Heav'n, and Heav'n to Earth dif-The Waves were hush'd, the Trident cast aside, And the smooth Seas with Neptune's Word com-Old Triton rising from the Deeps He spies, (pli'd, Whose Shoulders rob'd with native Purple rise, And bids him now his Trumpets Call repeat, And make the Rivers and the Floods retreat. A Spiral-shell he for a Trumpet us'd, Which from a Point the Air at large diffus'd; This when the Numen o're the Ocean founds,

s.

A.

ife;

ł,

oth

The East and West from Shore to Shore rebounds.

Now

Now when h'had thrust his dripping Beard aside,
And to his Shell his bloated Cheeks appli'd,
The Seas and Earth the Summons heard, and scar'd
All to their ancient Bounds in hast repair'd.
Now Seas had Shores, in Banks the Rivers slow'd,
The Streams were pinch'd, their Heads the Mountains show'd;

The Land crept up, the Champagne larger grew, As flowly back the Seas, commanded, drew.

Some time nowpaft, their Heads the Woods disclos'd, Their slimy Twigs, and muddy Arms expos'd; Earth was it self; but when Deucation view'd, All empty, silent, desolate, and rude, Thus, to his Pyrrha, kind Deucation spoke, And slowing Tears out with his Language broke.

O Wife, O Sifter, whom alone I find

Escap'd the common Wreck of Womankind;

Us, whom two Wives to two kind Brothers bore,

Now dangers join as Marriage joyn'd before;

Survey the rising Dawn, the falling West,

All Earth is now by us alone possest,

Sea

To

If

Sti

H

A

W

W

1

I

N

A

T

1 afide,

Car'd

v'd.

loun.

rew,

los'd

;

ke.

re,

Seas have o'rewhelm'd the rest; nor yet must we Too confident of our own fafety be; I fee the Clouds, and while those Clouds apppear, Still think vast Deluges and Dangers near. Hadst thou alone, my Dear, our Fate surviv'd, Ah, how had poor distracted Pyrrha liv'd? What lonesome Terrors now had rack'd thy Soul? What Friend could with thy woful Heart condole? I'm fure, my Dear, if Seas had fwallow'd thee, I too had dy'd, and Seas had swallow'd me. My Father here had foon his Wisdom us'd, And a new Stock thro' the wast World diffus'd; And, O, could I by his Mysterious Art To moulded Clay a Humane Soul impart! But now (for fo the angry Gods decreed) We two are all the World's furviving breed: We two alone our ruin'd Race sustain, And but the Patterns of Mankind remain.

He spoke; they wept, and both agreed at last, They'd to some Oracle affistance hast; Straight down they go to fam'd Cephisus Waves, Whose Stream, tho soul; its ancient Bounders laves;

C 4 Thence,

24

Thence, when their Heads and Cloaths they'd purifi'd,

Their Steps they toward the facred Fane appli'd. Whose Roofs a muddy, hoary Moss disclose; No holy Fire the flimy Altar flows; Before the Sacred Steps, they proftrate low. Cold trembling Kiffes on the Stones bestow. And thus; If yet the angry Gods relent, Or can to righteous Pray'rs and Vows confent, Say, gentle Themis, by what methods we Our Kind renew'd through all the World may fee? The Goddess kind, thus with their Prayers complid, Go! vail your Heads, your Garments all unti'd, And your great Mothers Bones behind you caft. A long while they in ftrange Amazement past; Pyrrha broke Silence first, and first accus'd Th' Injunction, and Obedience first refus'd. With faltring Words she Pardon begs, if she Can't bear her Mothers Bones disturb'd to fee. Yet on the Oracle they meditate, And with deep Thoughts the cloudy Words debate;

Aţ

Atl

And

Ma

The

In

An

Ye

Bu

A

T

D

L

N

A

I

C

At last Deucation through the darkness breaks, And thus in softest terms to Pyrrha speaks.

pu-

d. ee?

d.

;

t

Or I'm deceiv'd, or else this strange Command May both with Piety and Duty stand; The Earth is our great Mother, and the Stones In her dark Womb conceal'd, the Mystic Bones; And these behind us we may safely throw.

Pyrrha was pleas'd, her Lord conjectur'd fo, Yet fear'd, (so little Heavenly Truth prevail'd) But'twas no sin to try, howe're the trial fail'd (brac'd,

They went, and veil'd their Heads, their Coats unAnd o'er their heads the Stones commanded, cast
The Stones (yet who'ld that wondrous change beDid not Antiquity its suffrage give?) (lieve,
Laid all their hard resisting Nature down,
More soft by just degrees, and shapeful grown.
As when with rougher Tools hard Marble wrought
Is to some outward Lines and Figure brought;
So yielding Stones a humane Feature shew'd
At distance, but unpolish'd, harsh, and rude;
The Body moist and pliant Atoms made,
The firm and hard were to the Bones convey'd;
What

What were the Veins before, the Veins remain'd; And all those Stones a manly Figure gain'd (So Heaven ordain'd) which by the Man were thrown,

The Woman's all with Female foftness shone. Hence we're a hardy, stubborn, toiling Crew, And our Originals in our Nature shew.

The Earth all other various Creatures bred;
For when the Sun his warmer influence shed
On moisten'd Mud, the Mud and Lakes conceiv'd
Fermenting heat, the quickning Atoms heav'd
I'the vital soil, as some impregnate Womb,
And some resemblance by degrees assume.
So when great Nile's divided Streams desert
The slimey Fields, and to their Banks revert,
And the fresh Mud with Heavenly ardour burns;
As the warm Turf the careful Plowman turns,
A thousand Creatures of a thousand kinds
He there beneath the teeming surface finds,
Some sinish'd quite, unsinish'd Embrio's some
To view unshap'd, and half impersect come;

N

A

F

A

N

P

S

B

S

1

1

Nay in one Body oft one part they find

in'd;

were

,

iv'd

ns;

Alive, the other but in Mud defign'd. For Heat and Moisture, temper'd right, conceive, And from these two their Beings all receive; Nay tho they difagree, their Kind debates, Prolific prove, that quarrel Life creates. (warm'd So Earth new drown'd in Mud, but throughly By Sun-beams, with a thousand Creatures swarm'd; Some known before, which kept their former shapes; Some Monstrous, hasty Nature's wild escapes. To Thee huge Python too the fruitful Earth Against her will gave a prodigious birth, (made Whose hideous bulk, like some vast Mountain, The unfledg'd Tribes, of new-made Men, afraid. This Monster Phabus with his Bow destroy'd; His Bow before on Kids and Fawns employ'd. A thousand Shafts the dying Monster bore, A thousand Wounds fluc'd out his pois'nous gore; And, that no Time might blaft his purchas'd Fame, The God appoints the facred Pythian Games. And on the Sports impos'd the Serpent's name.

Who e'er at Whorle bats here, whose nimbler heels Prevail'd, or rak'd the Course with swifter Wheels, In Honour then a Beechen Garland wore: For yet no Land the verdant Lawrel bore. Phabus his golden Locks at random bound. And his bright Brows with any Garland crown'd. Penei an Daphne first Apollo lov'd, Not by a chance, but Cupid's anger mov'd. Phabus, the Serpent kill'd, puft up with pride, Bending his Bow the Youthful Cupid Spi'd; And what wouldst thou pretend, poor wanton Boy. Said he, wouldft thou those warlike Arms employ? The Martial Bow becomes our Shoulders best, We with a thousand Wounds that Beast opprest; We with a thousand Shafts the Monster kill'd. Whose pois'nous Carcase cover'd all the Field. Go. Child, fome filly Hearts with Loves enflame, But don't pretend to our immortal Fame, To whom thus Venus Son; Thy Shafts may wound Such Monsters, I'le Apollo's felf confound; As much as other Creatures yield to thee,

So much thy Glories must submit to me.

He

He

An

Tv

On

Th

Is I

Th

An

Cup

Th

The

Of

In

An

Oft

An

He

An

She

For

Th

Th

els

ls,

у,

?

e, d

c

He spoke, and thence with angry swiftness springs, And mounts Parnaffus height with foaring Wings. Two different Shafts there from his Quiver draws, One Love to kill, the other Love to cause. That which with love enflames the frozen Heart, Is sharply pointed, and a golden Dart; That which destroys it, has a blunter head, And all the Reed's fill'd up with lazy Lead. Cupid in Daphne fix'd his leaden Dart, The golden reach'd Apollo's wounded heart. The God straight loves, the Maid detests the name Of Lover, but delights in Savage Game; In Forest shades, and hunting spends her days, And emulates Diana's Virgin praise. Oft her loofe Hair at large dishevell'd flies, And oft her Curles a golden Fillet ties; Her many lov'd, but she their loves declin'd, And with impatience shunn'd the bearded kind. She hunts the Forests through, and never cares For Love, or Marriage, or succeeding Heirs. Thou ow'ft me Sons, oft would her Father cry; Thou ow'ft me Grandsons, would he oft reply. Straight 18

Who e'er at Whorle-bats here, whose nimbler heels Prevail'd, or rak'd the Course with swifter Wheels, In Honour then a Beechen Garland wore: For yet no Land the verdant Lawrel bore. Phabus his golden Locks at random bound, And his bright Brows with any Garland crown'd, Peneian Daphne first Apollo lov'd, Not by a chance, but Cupid's anger mov'd. Phabu, the Serpent kill'd, puft up with pride, Bending his Bow the Youthful Cupid spi'd; And what wouldst thou pretend, poor wanton Boy, Said he, wouldft thou those warlike Arms employ? The Martial Bow becomes our Shoulders best. We with a thousand Wounds that Beast opprest; We with a thousand Shafts the Monster kill'd, Whose pois'nous Carcase cover'd all the Field. Go, Child, fome filly Hearts with Loves enflame. But don't pretend to our immortal Fame, To whom thus Venus Son; Thy/Shafts may wound Such Monsters, I'le Apollo's felf confound; As much as other Creatures yield to thee, So much thy Glories must submit to me.

He

He

An

Tw

On

Th

Is f

Th

An

Cup

Th

The

Of

In 1

An

Oft

An

He

An

She

For

Th

Th

els

ls,

?

e,

d

He spoke, and thence with angry swiftness springs, And mounts Parnaffus height with foaring Wings. Two different Shafts there from his Quiver draws, One Love to kill, the other Love to cause. That which with love enflames the frozen Heart. Is sharply pointed, and a golden Dart; That which destroys it, has a blunter head, And all the Reed's fill'd up with lazy Lead. Cupid in Daphne fix'd his leaden Dart, The golden reach'd Apollo's wounded heart. The God straight loves, the Maid detests the name Of Lover, but delights in Savage Game; In Forest shades, and hunting spends her days, And emulates Diana's Virgin praise. Oft her loofe Hair at large dishevell'd flies, And oft her Curles a golden Fillet ties; Her many lov'd, but she their loves declin'd, And with impatience shunn'd the bearded kind. She hunts the Forests through, and never cares For Love, or Marriage, or succeeding Heirs. Thou ow'ft me Sons, oft would her Father cry; Thou ow'ft me Grandsons, would he oft reply. Straight Straight Crimfon blushes in her Cheeks were feen, As if some Crime in Marriage Joys had been. With flattering Arms around his Neck she'd cry. Dear Father, grant me this small boon, That I May live a Virgin, and a Virgin dye; This could Diana of her Rather gain. He grants her wish, but grants alas in vain : Her own fweet Beauty, and her charming Eyes Refift her wishes, and her hope defies. Phabus fair Daphne loves, would Daphne wed, Hopes what he wishes, by himself misled, And as fwift flames the Stubble foon dispatch. And Hedges dry'd, the flames as fwiftly catch. From Torches fixt by night, to shew the way To Passengers, and left till breaking day; So Love's foft flames on Phabus bosome gain, And fruitless hopes his growing Love maintain. He fees her Hair how to the wind it flies, What Beams if comb'd they'd be, he raptur'd cries, He scorns the brightest Stars in midnight Skies, Compar'd with her illustrious sparkling Eyes.

He

He

And

He

He

An

All

She

An

Sta

N

Sta

W

TI

T

B

Ir T

V

S

R

He fees her kifs her Father's hoary Cheeks, And, mad with love, for fuch a Banquet feeks. Her Hands, her Fingers, and her Wrifts admires, Her Arm, stripp'd naked up, his Bosome fires: And thinks what modest Robes from fight remove. All Mines of Charms, and Magazines of Love. She hears his Raptures, I wift as Air she flies, And won't look back for all his tendereft Cries: Stay Daphne, stay thou lovely Nymph, 'tis I, No common Wretch, no barbarous Enemy, (fly. Stay cruel charming Nymph, thus Lambs would Were prouling Wolves, or Savage Tygers nigh. Thus Hinds would run from Forest brutish Kings. And Doves from Eagles fretch their active Wings. They fly their Adversary's dreadful Rage; But me foft loves and tenderest thoughts engage In chase of thee; Wretch that I am! if e're Thy pretty Legsa fawcy Thorn should tear; Wretch that I am! should I thy fall procure! Shouldst thou for me a pain or smart endure! Rough are the ways, untrodden all the Fields. Each way thou tak'ft, some unknown danger yields. Softly, leen,

1

.

He

Softly, my Dear! the way before thee view. And I'le thy flight with fofter fleps purfue. Fly any where; but know thy Suitor first, No Mountaineer among fierce Tygers nurst; No Shepherd I, nor common Ruftic Swain. Who drive my Heards or Flocks along the Plain. Delphi and Royal Patara are mine. Bright Claros too, and Tenedos divine : Great Yove's my Father; I alone declare What things past, present, and what future are: By me the Downy Eunuch fweetly fings, I fofter Notes compose to sounding Strings: My Shafts strike fure, but One, alas! has found A furer, my unpractic'd heart to wound: Physick's divine Invention's all my own, And I a helper thro' the world am known: All Herbs I throughly know, and all their use, Their healing Virtues, and their baleful Juice. Wo's me that Love no powerful Herb can cure, Nor all my Arts their Lord himfelf fecure! More had he spoke, but frighted Daphne flies, And audience to his half-spoke words denies.

Yes

Ye

He

Th

An

Th

Ye

At

To

But

An

And

Th

He

And

He

She

Yet

And

Bo I

The

On I

And

1.

et

Yet when the fled, her Scorn victorious feem'd: Her very Coyness made her Charms efteem'd. The wanton Winds free with her Garments play'd, And naked oft her Legs and Bosome laid: The fofter breezes toft her flowing Hair. Yet as she fled, she look'd more heav'nly fair. At last the Youthful God no more could bear To foend his Complements in empty air, But all enflam'd with love, more swift pursues, And love his speed, and love his strength renews. And as some Grey-hound when, with watchful The Hare he tripping o're the Field descries, (Eyes, He nimbly stretches for the flying Prey, And the for Shelter fouds as swift away; He ftrongly bears, and thinks his game fecure, She fearing, thinks her felf a Captive fure, Yet scapes his Jaws, and, fleec't, more swiftly flies, And makes Her Covert, and His Heels defies. so Phabus warm'd, the flying Daphne prest, The God by hope, the Maid by fear possest. On Love's swift wings impetuous Phabus flies, And any breathing time and rest denies; Hangs at her back, and with a panting air Blows in her Neck, and parts her careless Hair. She pale, her strength just spent, and weari'd quite With the long toils of her laborious flight, Looks at her Father's Streams, and Help! she cries, Help, Father, if your Brooks are Deities: Gape Earth, and swallow me, or every Grace Which pleases, by some sudden change deface! Scarce had she done, when chilly Cold congeal'd Her stiffning Limbs, thin Bark her Breasts conceal'd: Leaves were her Hairs, her Arms were Boughs, her So swift, now draws a deep tenacious Root. (Foot A spiry Top supplies her lovely Face, And Beauties still the shining Lawrel grace. This Phabus loves, and in the new-made Plant, Beneath the Bark observes her heart to pant : His Arms about her branching Limbs he threw, And kis'd the Tree, the Tree from kisses flew. When thus the God; Since now thou n'er canst be My Wife, thou still shalt live my favour'd Tree. By me thy Leaves shall be for Garlands worn, My Brows, my Quiver, and my Harp adorn.

When

W

Af

To

Sha

Th

At

All

Fro

An

Th

Th

An

Beg

Pen

His

His

And

And

Diff

Her

And

I

When Roman Chiefs, for Victories renown'd,
Ascend in pomp with Joy's triumphant sound
To Jove's proud Capitol, the Chiefs around
Shall ever be with Lawrel Garlands crown'd.
Thou ever shalt the faithful Guardian stand
At Casar's Gates, thy powerful Leaves command
All dangers off, and sence the sacred Oak
From the prodigious Thunder's dreadful stroke.
And, as I'm still unshorn and youthful seen,
Thy Leaves shall stourish with immortal Green.
Thus Phabus spoke, the Lawrel gently mov'd,
And with her bending Top his words approv'd.

quite ries,

ď

al'd:

, her

Foot

t,

٧.

٧.

e.

ft be

Vhen

In Thessaly delicious Tempe lies,
Begirt with wooddy Hills which kiss the Skies;
Peneus through't from Pindus lofty Springs
His hasty Streams with foaming sury slings.
His Falls a Cloud of misty Vapour shew, (Dewl And drench the neighbouring Woods with weighty And distant Dwellers, and the Neighbours round Disturbs and deafens with His thundring sound.
Here the great River dwells, here holds the Throne, And in his Cavern, Arch'd with native Stone,

O're all his Subject Streams a Monarch stands,
And Waters, and the watry Nymphs commands.
Hither his Country Rivers kindly came,
Uncertain how they should their Visit name;
Or to condole, or to congratulate
His Metamorphos'd Daughter's wondrous Fate.
Thither Spercheus came with Poplars crown'd,
And swift Enipeus with a restless sound.
Slow-pac'd Amphrysus, Eus, and the Sage Apidanus, cramp'd with encroaching Age;
And other nameless Rivers thither force
Their weari'd Waters with a winding Course.

Inachus only from the Meeting stay'd,
Sad in his Cave, and negligently lay'd,
With flowing Tears he swells his native Stream,
Iö his Daughter's all his mournful Theam;
Iö concluded lost, though doubtful He,
Whether among the Quick or Dead she be.
Find her he can't, and thinks she can't be found,
And deep his thoughts imagin'd-mischies wound.
Great Jove by chance, returning To spy'd

Great Jove by chance, returning Io fpy'd

Home from her Father's Springs without a Guide.

And

An

01 (Pe

Co

(A

Gr

Do

Do

No

He

Th

An

An

Wf

Ob

An

Jun

Th

She

Rai

Th

Ho

And straight the luftful god approaching, faid, O thou fit Mate for Jove, dear charming Maid! (Perhaps for some ignoble Bed design'd) Come let's in yonder Grove a shelter find! (And shews the Grove) for now the mounting Day Grows hot, and scorches with a pointed Ray. Don't, though alone, the Savage Tygers fear : Don't fear the Woods, a God will guard thee there. No meaner God but I, whose awful hand (mand. Heav'ns Scepter hold, and Lightning's rage com-Think not to fly me; (she began to fly) And quickly pass'd fam'd Lerna's Pastures by ; And foon Lircean shady Fields had past, When Jove o're all a fudden darkness cast, Obscur'd her paffage, and restrain'd her flight, And ravish'd her in that unnatural Night. Juno at last looks down, and thinks it strange, The Mid-day should to sudden Mid-night change. She knew the Sun could n'er from Meers or Flouds Raife fuch groß Vapours, fuch impervious Clouds: Then looks about for Jove, for well she knew How oft at lawless Game her Husband flew.

D 3

d

Not

Not finding him, Or I'm deceiv'd, she cries,
Or I'm abus'd, straight from the bending Skies
She shoots to Earth, and clears the misty Air;
But cautious Jove of her approach aware;
Of Io straight a lovely Heiser made,
And round the Plains the wanton Heiser play'd.
Juno, though vex'd, the Heiser's Beauty prais'd,
And soon a thousand needless Questions rais'd;
Whose Beast, or whence, or who the Herd might own?

As if the truth she'd neither sear'd, nor known.

Jove with a Fiction stop'd her mouth, and swore

The neighb'ring Soil the pretty Creature bore.

Then Juno begg'd her at her Husband's hands;

Confus'd the god at her Petition stands;

What should he do? 'twas too too cruel sure

To let his Mistress Juno's rage endure.

And should he such a trisling Boon deny,

'Twould re-enslame her ancient Jealousy.

Shame bids him give her, but more powerful Love

Strongly against the just Concession strove;

Sh

Sh

Hi

An

He

Su

Ti

He

Ar

Bu

TI

Re

Ιö

Sh

Is

0

D

L

W

W

Shame got the day; for what could fove excuse, Should he his Sifter, and his Queen refuse? His Tricks too open quickly would be laid, And the fine Heifer be suppos'd a Maid. Her wish obtain'd, the Goddess still appear'd Suspicious, and her Husband's practice fear'd, Till thence she to a Arestor's Son convey'd Her charge, and him the watchful Keeper made. Argus his Head a hundred Eyes possest, But only two at once declin'd to rest; The other watch'd, and in a constant round Refreshment in alternate courses found. Where e're he turn'd, he always Io view'd, Io he faw, though the behind him stood. She feeds all day, but when the Sun declin'd. Is hous'd, her Neck the Withs unworthy bind; On Leaves and Shrubs, and bitter Grass she feeds, Drinks muddy Streams, and when a Bed she needs, Lies on the ground, all cold, and hard, and bare. When she'd her suppliant Arms to Argus rear, What she'd to Argus rear, alas! she wants; Not words, but Lowing, vents her fad Complaints. She ght

D 4

d, e ve

me

40

She, of her uncouth Voice's found afraid, Her Father's Banks, where oft before she play'd, Recovers; in the Stream her Horns descries, And from her wretched Self distracted flies. Her Father's Nymphs their former Mate disown, Nay she's to Inachus himself unknown. She with her Father and her Sifter goes, Loves to be ftrok'd, and wondrous Tameness shews. Old Inachus with Grass to feed her, stands, She kiffes oft, and licks his aged Hands; And weeps, and could she speak, for help her prayer Would be, and she'd her Name and Fate declare. Now only where her Foot impression made The mark, her Name to Inachus betray'd. Wretch that I am! her tender Father cries, Hangs on her Neck, and ecchoes to her fighs. Wretch that I am! he cries, fo long have we Made inquisition through the World for thee! We've found thee now at last indeed, but so, As only aggravates our former wo. Thou'rt filent now, nor canst our words return, But in deep Sighs, and gentle Lowings mourn.

Unthink-

Unt

And

No

Am

No

AG

Del

Wi

Wh

Arg

The

Her

No

Cal

Th

Ab

Ta

Pu

To

La

Hi

I

Unthinking I, had found a Match for thee,
And hop'd for Heirs, and long Posterity;
Now from the Herd must thou a Mate obtain,
Among the Herd, thy wretched Heirs remain.
Nor can Fate finish my extended Woes,
A Godhead now an Inconvenience grows.
Debarr'd from Death, Eternal Sorrows roll
With easeless Tortures in my wounded Soul.
While thus her Father vents his mournful Loves,
Argus his Charge to other Fields removes;
Then mounts a losty Hill, and thence surveys
Her wandring motions, and her restless ways.

75.

er

nk-

But now Heav'ns Monarch, whose superior care
No longer could his Iö's Sufferings bear,
Calls Maja's Son, and to his Care commits
The death of Argus; straight his Wings he sits
About his heels, and in his pow'rful hand
Takes up his wondrous sleep-creating Wand;
Puts his wing'd Bonnet on, and swiftly slies
To th' lower World, down from his Father's Skies;
Lays by his Bonnet there, and Wings, but keeps
His Wand, the Parent of resistless Sleeps.

His stolen Flocks like some poor Shepherd seeds,
Who solaces his Toils on tuneful Reeds.

Argus was with the novel sound alarm'd;
The warbling Whistle Juno's Herds-man charm'd,
Come here, says he, and on this Mossy Stone
Repose my Friend! these fruitful Plains alone
Would tempt a Swain, and this delightful shade
To cool poor Shepherds was by Nature made.

Mercury fits him down, and spends the day
(Half gone before) in wild discourse and play;
And with his Pipe's bewitching Musick tries
With sleep to close the Keeper's wakeful Eyes.
He tries to put the downy Witcherast by,
And, though half clos'd his Luminaries lye,
Half watch; And he the Pipe's late Rise inquires,
And all the Tale how first 'twas made, defires;

When thus the God: Among the Mountains Which sweet Arcadia's flowry Plains enfold, (cold Among the Sylvane Nymphs was Syring fair, A lovely Maid, and of a charming Aire.

Oft would she from the Am'rous Satyrs fly,

And all the Gods of Woods and Fields defy;

To

7

A

T

B

N

F

P

A

Bu

Ar

W

PA

He

He

In

Th

Ye An

W

Th An To chaft Diana she as chaftly pray'd, And, tuck'd like Her, a Figure like her made. The Maid you'd hardly from the Goddess know, But by the Horny, and the Golden Bow. Nay, though diftinguish'd so, you'ld soon mistake. From the Lycean Hill returning back, Pan, Crown'd with Pines, the Beaut'ous Syring And words had foon his kindling Loves purfu'd; But off she threw him with a scornful pride. And fled, till ftopp'd by fandy Ladon's Tyde; Where, that she might avoid a luftful Rape, (shape. She begg'd her Sifter Nymphs would change her Pan thought he'd hugg'd his Mistress, when indeed He only hugg'd a Truss of Moorish Reed. He fighs, his fighs the toffing Reeds return In fost small Notes, like one that seem'd to mourns The new, but pleasant Notes the God surprize. Yet this shall make us Friends at last, he cries. And fo this Pipe of Reeds unequal fram'd With Wax, and Spring from his Miftress nam'd. Thus Mercury draws out his tedious Tale, And fees cold fleep on all his Eyes prevail;

res,

d.

ains old

To

He stops, and with his Magick Wand he strokes His strugling Eyes, and deadly sleep provokes. The long'd-for Conquest gain'd, without a pause, The God at once his dreadful Faulchion draws, Lops off his drowfy Head, and hurles it o're The Rock, still spotted with the crimson Gore. There Argus lies; and all that wondrous Light Which gave his hundred Eyes their useful fight, Lies buried now in one Eternal Night. But Tuno that she might his Eyes retain. Soon fix'd 'em in her Peacock's gaudy Train. But now enrag'd, she all her vengeance turns On Io's Head; at her Her fury burns. The Heifer straight She with a Gad-fly stings; Away like mad through all the World she flings, Till Nile's fam'd Banks the wretched Wanderer ftay'd,

On those fair Banks she kneel'd, and there she pray'd, Her Eyes quite drown'd with Tears, her mournful Made all her Sorrows to her Master known. (Tone She seem'd as if she'd with her Tears complain Of her hard Fate, and undeserved Pain.

Hen

H

A

A

A

Fe

Sa

Re

He

An

He

Rei

No

But

Tw

Left

Soft

Nov

Who

Tol

Son

Sh

Her lifted Eyes, Jove's kinder thoughts implore, And beg she may be thus abus'd no more. Around his Juno's Neck his Arms he throws, And then intreats she'd end poor Io's woes; Fear not, she ne're shall more disturbance make, Says he, and seals it by the Stygian Lake.

The Goddess yields, and she her former face Regains, and Woman takes the Heiser's place. Her Body's smooth'd, she casts her spacious Horns; An Eye proportion'd well, her Brow adorns. Her Mouth grows less, her Feet and Hands again Return, and Nails for solid Hoofs remain. Nothing of Heiser now the Nymph can shew, But a clean shape and Skin more white than Snow. Two Feet can bear her now, but still she fears, Lest her old bellowing Tone should grate her Ears. Softly she tries her Voice's former sound, Now with Egyptian Adorations crown'd.

She Epaphus, Jove's facred Issue, bore; Whom with his Mother all the Towns adore. To him in Spirit equal, and in Years, Son of the Sun, bold Phaeton appears.

er

d, ful

ne

er

With

With haughty Language, and with equal state. He'd proud of his Illustrious Father prate. This Io's Son difdain'd; And what, faid he. Can Clymene impose so far on thee? She only talks to footh thy youthful Pride, And would her Shame with gay Pretences hide. The blushing Boy with shame his Rage abates; But to his Mother straight th' affront relates. And what will grieve you more, fays he? 'twas I, 'Twas I, the Bold, the Fierce, flood filent by, Blush'd at the bold reproach, was hush'd and mute, Nor could the Scandal of his Talk refute. If I'm from Heav'n indeed, give me on Earth Unquestion'd Tokens of my Heavenly Birth. He spoke, and round her Neck his Arms he threw; Begg'd by his own, and Merop's Head, she'd shew Some certain mark of his undoubted Sire, And by his Sifter's hop'd-for Nuptial fire; Whether by Phaëton's Entrearies mov'd, Or vex'd to be for fuch a Crime reprov'd. She rais'd her Arms in passion toward the Skies, And on the Sun fix'd her undaunted Eyes;

By

B

SI

By

T

T

M

M

If

N

Hi

If

As

Br

Gr

Ar

Inc

He

By that great Light, fays she, whose fi'ry Streams Shoot down to Earth with hot refulgent Beams. By him who fees and hears us all, I fwear (Year, That Sun who warms the World, and guides the That Sun's thy Father; if I forge or feign, May he from me his vital Beams restrain: My laft, dear Son, may this curs'd minute be, If I wrong'd Him, or e're impos'd on Thee. Not far from hence his glorious Palace stands, His rising borders on our Native Lands; If thy great Spirit dares attempt it, go, Ask him, and from himself thy Birthright know. Brisk with his Mother's words, bold Phaëton Grasps at the Skies, and catches at the Sun; And Æthiopia soon, and India past, India too near his fcorching influence cast, He reach'd his Father's blushing Rife at laft.

- - which are to fight the share to the desired

s I,

ite,

w, ew

By

The

The SECOND BOOK.

The Argument of the Second Book.

Phaëton's Access to the Palace of the Sun his Father; from whom, as a Pledge of bis Divine Original, be obtains the guidance of the Solar Chariot for one day. He sets the World on fire. The Athiopians then turn'd Blacks. Phaeton's Fall and Death lamented by his Sifters, and his Kinsman Cygnus, who is transform'd to a Swan; the Sifters to Poplar Trees. Jupiter's Descent to Earth after the Conflagration: In his Progress be falls in love with Calisto; enjoys her by assuming Diana's likeness. Juno enrag'd, transforms Califto into a Bear. Her Son Arcas, being about to shoot ber in that Shape, is prevented by Jupiter's translating both up to the Stars. Juno's complaint thereupon to Oceanus. She's carried up to Heaven by ber Peacocks, whose Trains were newly beautified with Argus's bundred Eyes. As the Crow was likewife lately chang'd from black to white (for not taking warning of the Daw, who recited both ber's and Nyctemene's Transformations) upon ber informing Phoebus of bis Mistresses Falleness to bim. Ocyroë, the Daughter of Chiron, baving predicted the Fates of Æsculapius, and ber Father, is turn'd into a Mare : Chiron (Father of Asculapius) invokes Apollo's Aid in vain. Apollo being then turn'd Herdman, and so taken up with an Amour, that be neglected his very Herds, gave Mercury opportunity to feal away bis Oxen. Battus only conscious to the Theft, is circumvented by Mercury, and chang'd into a Touch-stone. Mercury passing from thence into Attica, enjoys Herse, the Daughter of Cecrops. Aglaurus, through envy of her Sifter Herse's happines, becomes petrifid; Mercury afterwards fent by Jupiter to drive Agenor's Oxen to the Sea-side; where Jupiter, assuming the Shape of a Bull, transports Europa over the Cretan Sea.

.

The The The Wi

The

Hug

H Shri

Æg And Som

Oth Som

And T

And

THE Sun's great Hall, on lofty Columns rais'd,
With burnish'd Gold and sparkling Rubies
The Roof a Cieling of pure Iv'ry grac'd, (blaz'd;
The folding Doors with silver Plates o'recast;
The Ground was rich, but the wise Graver's Hand
With nobler Art did every Eye command;
There Vulcan with a curious Fancy show'd (flow'd,
Huge Seas, which round the Earth's vast Compass
And the blew Skies about the massive Globe bestow'd.

He made the Seas by their own gods posses'd,
Shrill Triton, changing Proteut, and the rest.

Ægaon lolling on a Monstrous Whale,
And the bright Nymphs in genuine motions all;
Some rode on Billows with a careless pride,
Others on Rocks, their Sea-green Tresses dry'd;
Some back'd a Dolphin; lovely all, and fair,
And like, as Sisters, in their shape and air. (Woods,
The Earth had Men, and Towns, and Beasts, and
And Rural Gods, and pretty Nymphs and Floods:

The whole Design a glorious Heav'n embrac'd,
And on the opening Door's right Leaf were plac'd Six heav'nly Signs, the rest the adverse Folding grac'd.

When the bold Boy the vast Ascent had gain'd, Where his Illustrious doubtful Father reign'd. He faw quick beams of a prodigious Light Shoot forth, and guided by the wondrous fight, With distant looks furvey'd his radiant Face; The facred luftre of that awful Place Forbad a nearer view; the lofty Throne With Gems my ferious and transparent shone: The God himfelf One mighty Glory shows: The Royal Purple from his Shoulders flows. On either hand a noble Gourt appears Of equal Hours, and Days, and Months, and Year The Spring stands by with flowry Garlands dreft; Hot Summer too, with weighty Sheaves opprest; And Autumn all with blood of Grapes besmear'd, And hoary Winter with his grifly Beard, Th' all-feeing Sunthrough all the crowd defcri'd

The trembling Youth with wonders stupisid;

A

T

0

If

If

An

Re

By

Th

Th

De

Th

No

Asl

By

Qu Th

He

Wr

And what, faid he, what brings thee here, dear Boy, Thy Mother's Honour, and thy Father's Joy?

To whom encourag'd Phaëton repli'd,
O thou whose quickning beams are scatter'd wide
O're the vast Universe, Immortal Sire!
If we may to that facred Birth aspire;
If by no false pretence of your great Name
Ambitious Clymene conceal'd her shame;
Be kind, and our disputed Birth-right prove
By some sure Pledges of a Father's Love! (down

He pray'd. The God with gentle smiles laid The dazling slames of his resulgent Crown; Then call'd him up, and with a fond embrace; Dear Youth, the Pride of our Immortal Race, Thy Mein, said he, thy Spirit's all Divine; Nor art thou more my Clymene's, than mine: Ask any proof my Boy, 'tis thine, I swear By that black Sigian Lake, whose Waters hear Our sateful Oath. Heav'n sears those mystic Streams, Though dark and invious to our strongest Beams. He scarce had ended, when the great-Soul'd Boy, Wrapt with the suries of immoderate joy,

E 2

Lend

cri'd

Cars

eft:

eft;

r'd,

c'd

ing

d,

And

Lend me, he cry'd, your Chariot, grant I may Once guide your Steeds, and give the World a Day.
Struck with his own past-Oath, and all amaz'd,
The tender Father on the Stripling gaz'd;
A thousand Sorrows pierc'd his careful Breast,
A thousand Sighs his Penitence exprest:
Sev'n times he his illustrious Tresses shook,

And thus at last with well-weigh'd Passion spoke.

'Twas this alone I could refuse a Son,
Else by's own Wish, and our rash Oath undone.
Thy Love, poor hapless Youth, thy Looks betray'd
My luckless Tongue; unwary Fondness made
The fatal Promise; O retract it now!
Retract thy Wish, and I can keep my Vow!
Think Phaëton, think o're thy wild Desires! (quires.
That Work more Years, and greater Strength reConsine thy Thoughts to thy own humbler Fate;
What thou wouldst have, becomes no mortal State.
Tho Gods themselves with their own fulness please,
And live in perfect Bliss, and perfect Ease,
None yet but I could e're pretend to guide
These Steeds, or o're the lightsome Day preside.

Nay,

Na

Do

Yet

WI

Wh

Ma

Wh

Lik

Th

An

Of

W

Oft

Ifh

Wit

But

Ath

Nay, our Almighty Jove, whose dreadful Hand Does rapid Flames and thundring Clouds command, Ne're thought himself for our Employment sir, Yet all to his Superior Pow'r submit.

ay.

z'd,

y'd

es.

re-

;

ite.

ue,

The Road begins with craggy Hills and steep, Where our fresh Steeds can scarce their footsteps keep,

While clambring upwards; their Meridian height Makes me to tremble at the dreadful fight.

While Seas and Earth deep, wondrous deep below, Like fome small Point at that unfathomable distance Their Evening Course is Precipices all, (show. And only steddy Reins prevent the fall Of Chariot, Horse and Charioteer; even I, Who ev'ry night in Tethys Bosome lie, Oft makes her fear, lest tumbling head-long down, I should not Sleep to close the day, but Drown.

Besides, the rapid Orbs are daily whirl'd
With all the Stars around the Central World;
But I unmov'd with that impetuous Force
Athwart'em all drive with a constant Course.

Couldst thou, suppose the Chariot thine, couldst Cross both the Poles, or make their Axes bow? (thou Perhaps thou dreamst that Groves and Cities grow. Stately and rich Above, as yours Below, Poor childish Thoughts! alas fierce Monsters there In Ambuscade on every hand appear.

Shouldst thou drive right, and never mis the And promise fair to give the usual day, (quite; The Centaur's Shape and Bow would dash thee The Bull's sharp Horns would more enhance the Thou'ldft fear the furious Lyon's threatning Taws: The Crab's, and the black Scorpion's dreadful Claws. (Hand,

Nor, when they'r hot and fret, can thy weak (Or fcarcely mine) thefe fi'ry Steeds command, They long for the wild range of all the Sky, And horrid Flames from their wide Nostrils fly. Exact not then, dear Son, the fatal Boon; Thy Wish is past, but thou canst change it soon; A Pledge thou begft for of a Father's Love, These very Fears a Father's kindness prove;

Observe

Ob A

Th

A

Co

Ca

Gl

I'I

Re

N

W Al

M

A

F

0

A

G

1

F

thou row, way,

thee ws;

and, veak

,

;

rye

Observe my Looks, my mournful Looks will show A Father's tenderness; O couldst thou know. Those mighty Cares which now distract my Breast, A Parent's Love would need no surer Test! Consider then, search the wide World around, Can nothing there that's good or great be found? Glut all th' Ambition of thy towring Soul, I'll grant its utmost wish without controul, Retract but this; which, should I grant, would be No Honour, but a fatal Grant for thee. Why are thy flattering Arms so fondly thrown About my Neck? poor thoughtless Youth! I own My Oath by those dark Strgian Waves is past, And should be kept, couldst thou grow wise at last.

Here Phabus ends. But such Discourse was vain, For as great Souls reslect with deep discain. On those cold sears which bloodless Age inspires, And mighty Dangers raise their vast Desires; Glory's their Prize, and with a God-like heat They'l cope with Monsters to be Fam'd and great; So Phaëton, with these grave Tales enslam'd, His Sire's irrevocable Promise claim'd.

E 4 . His

His thoughts were fill'd with great Atchievements And glanc'd with forn on the terraqueous Ball. (all, He laugh'd at all those Heav'nly Monsters feign'd : And gaudy Hopes his Fancy entertain'd To weild the lofty Empire of the Sky. And grasp at Universal Immortality. With anxious fears his careful Father faw His Resolutions, and assay'd to draw The last advantages from lingring Time, And give him leifure to repent his Crime. But hopes were vain: Tho loth, he leads the Boy Toward the bright Object of his Youthful Joy; The Chariot fram'd by Vulcan's artful Hand, And Gift, did on its golden Axis stand. Gold was the Beam; the Wheel's last circle Gold, On equal Spokes of Massive Silver roll'd; The Harness all with costly Stones enchas'd, (cast. Which Back the Sun's bright beams with equal luftre While the bold Youth with wondring Joy furvev'd

The glorious Work, the watchful Morn display'd

Her

Her

Ren

The

An

Wi

An

Co

He

Th

Do

Inf

Th

WI

AI

Ar

Th

An

Ar

W

I

Drive

Her purple Gates with blushing Roses drest Beneath the lowest Quarters of the East; The ralli'd Stars commanded, disappear, And Lucifer their Captain clos'd the Rear.

nts

all.

: 1

y

3 d, aft.

tre

ur-

ď

Her

But now when Phabus faw the Air o'respread With the foft curling shades of chearful Red. And the pale Moon with her decreafing Light Contract her Horns, and vanish from the fight; He bids the Hours his fiery Steeds prepare; The Goddesses with swift and early care Down from the lofty Stalls his Horses lead, Inspir'd with Flames, and with Ambrofia fed; Then put their Traces on with golden Reins; While the kind God with ineffectual pains A Flame-refifting Unguent largely shed Around his mortal Son's impatient Head; Then his curl'd Locks with radiant Glories dreft; And thus with ominous fighs a Father's cares ex-Here, Son, at least to our Advice submit, (prest. And spare the Lash, but strongly draw the Bit; With an impetuous hafte they cut their way, And scarce my Hand, though strongly curb'd, obey.

Drive not right o're the Æquinoctial Line; For where bright Stars in perfect Figures shine, There lies a beaten Road, an easy way. Where Chariot-Wheels their ancient Tracts difplay, The Zodiac call'd; which all obliquely winds, And to the Northward Cancer's Tropic finds; Southward to that of Capricorn it rolls, At equal distance still from both the Poles: There drive, the Tract will almost guide the Wheel; But that both Heav'n and Earth may duly feel An equal heat, drive neither high nor low, But steddy through the midmost Regions go; The Serpent to the Right, with care decline. And to the left avoid the Altar-Sign; The middle Way's the fafest, and the best. To Fortune's Conduct I submit the rest; May She propitious prove, and kind to thee, More than thy wish! but while we talk here, see The Night's last Shades before the Dawn are flown, The Morning calls us, and we must be gone; Up, take the Reins; or, could thy thoughts refule Our Chariot, and our kinder Counsels use,

Ne'er

N

A

T

W

A

A

Sw

Th

W

(H

W

W

Cu

Bu

Ar

As

She

Ne'er tempt thy Fate, but here fecurely flay, And leave my stronger Arm to guide the Day.

But Phaëton by lofty hopes posses, The burning Seat with Youthful vigour prest; With nimble hands those heavy Reins he weigh'd, And thanks unpleasing to his Father pay'd.

While his fond words elude his Father's care, A peal of fiery Neighs enflame the Air. Swift Spitfire, Dragon, Thunder, Blazing Star, The Sun's hot Steeds, attack that weighty Bar Which stops their Course, till Tethys gives them way. (Her luckless Nephew's Fate unknown) but They, When the wideWorld before their Feet they view'd With winged hafte their airy Course pursu'd, Cut yielding Clouds, and quickly left behind The earlier Freshes of the Eastern Wind. But the fierce Horses mis'd their wonted Freight, And scarce could feel his lightly jumping Weight; As fome tall Ship without her Ballast rolls. Which every Billow check, and every Wave controls, She reels and staggers o'er the dancing Waves, Till some blind Rock the foundring Vessel staves;

eel;

lay,

fee own,

fuse

Ne'er

So the Wild Steeds the bounding Chariot threw
From Cloud to Cloud, and o'er rough Mountains flew. (rage

They found their Driver, and with Headstrong Broke out, and soon in trackless Air engage; He frighted, knew not how to bend the Rein, And, had he known, his little Strength was vain. The foaming Beasts despis'd their Drivers hand, And soon threw off his Impotent Command.

Then first the greater Bear, benumm'd before, Grew hot, and vainly toward the Ocean bore. The harmless Snake, once stiff with Northern cold, Grew mad with heat, and formidably roll'd; And dull Bootes with his lazy Team Scamper'd, half melted by the scorching gleam. But when poor hapless Phaëton, dismay'd, From Heav'ns high Arch the lower World survey'd, All pale and trembling at the dismal sight, His Eyes quite dazl'd with immoderate Light, He wish'd h'had lest his Father's Steeds alone, His Wish ungranted, and his Birth unknown;

Hė

He

Hi

He

By

W

Th

WI

He

Th

And

Qui

No

But

And

The

His

The

And

Dow

Nor

Nor

ins

ige

ng

Π.

old,

ď,

He

He wish'd poor Merops had his Father prov'd, Himself less vain, his Mother less belov'd. He's hurri'd now, like some weak Pinnace torn By breaking Waves, and ruffling Storms o'erborn, When the fad Pilot, spent and hopeless, quits The Helm, and all to Heav'n and Pray'rs commits. What should he do? Huge Tracts before, behind He fees, and measures with his lab'ring mind; The East, the distant West his Eyes run o'er, And the vast prospect but confounds him more; Quite stunn'd, he neither holds nor quits the Reins, Nor knows his Horses Tempers, nor their Names, But trembling fees the Wonders of the Sky, And Monstrous Shapes in every quarter lye. There is a place where the black Scorpion bends His crooked Claws, and through two Signs extends. The Boy observ'd his dreadful Sting thrust out, And from its pointblack Poyfons thrown about; Down fell the Reins, his Fingers di'd with fear, Nor could his heart the dreadful Vision bear.

But when the Coursers found their Heads were Nor Curb, nor Bit, restrain'd their Liberty; (free, Alok Aloft their Nostrils breathing Flames they tost;
Then mad, and all their Sense of Order lost;
Through unfrequented aiery Coasts they sly,
And rake the unknown Regions of the Sky;
Up towards the fix'd Stars they force their way,
Where Suns were needless to enlarge the Day;
Now upward all they foar; now headlong down
Some Precipice the rapid Wheels are thrown;
Down towards our Earth they fink; the Moon amaz'd,

On her descending Brother's Horses gaz'd.

The stying Clouds evaporate with Heat,

And highest Grounds by an unnatural Sweat,

Breathe out their Native Moisture, and divide

With horrid Clests and Chinks on every side.

The hoary Fields grow white before their time,

And sappy Trees scorch in their Vernal prime.

The large Corn fields like Tinder catch the Fire,

And their own Loss, with their own Flames conspire.

But these are trifles; lofty Cities burn, and Mighty Nations all to Cinders turn,

Tall

Ta

At

He

An

Ti

Ori

Mi

Fo

N

Ai

Pi

W

Aı

W

A

H

H

T

B

1

Tall Woods about their glowing Mountains blaze; Athos, Cilician Taurus, Tmolus raise Thick Clouds of Smoke; Ata and Ida too, Her Springs exhaufted, like huge Beacons fhew 3 Sweet Helicon, and Hamus harmless yet, And raging Atms burns with double heat. Two topt Parnaffus, Eryx, Cynthus glow, Othrys and Rhodope now ftript of Snow. Mimas and Mycale, Citheron fam'd For facred Rites, and Phrygian Hermus flam'd. Not Caucasus, with Scythian Snows embrac'd, And lasting Cold, escap'd the fiery wast. Pindus and Offa with Olympus, bright With circling Gleams, reflect a difmal Light. And the cold Alps, and clouded Apennine, With the same desolating Lustre shine.

wn

1000

e,

e, pire.

Tall

di

When Phaeton thus faw the blazing World,
And horrid Fires through every Region hurl'd,
Half scorch'd, half chok'd, he breath'd out burning
His Seat grew hot, nor could he longer bear (Air,
The Sparks and scalding Ashes whirling round,
But pitchy Clouds his shatter'd thoughts confound;

He

He nothing sees nor knows, but where they please The furious Horses hurry him with ease.

It's thought that fiery Season outwards drew
Their Blood, and caus'd the Negro's sable Hew;
That Lybia then a barren Wild became,
And lost her Springs to feed the thirsty Flame.
The Nymphs with Hair disshevel'd, all bewail'd
Their uncouth Fate when Lakes and Fountains
Baotia lost her Dirce, Argos too (fail'd;
Her Amymone, nor could Corinth shew
The Muses springs: Nor were vast Rivers sav'd,
Which the wide Banks with crouding Waters lav'd.

Caïcus felt the Suns approaching Beams,
And Tanais smok'd in his own cold Streams;
Is mene smok'd, and old Arcadia's Flood,
And Xanthus first a raging Fire withstood;
Yellow Lycormas reek'd, Meander tri'd,
Could he his Head in endless windings hide.
These heats Eurotas into Vapours rais'd,
Orontes hiss'd, and broad Euphrates blaz'd;
Melas and Ganges, Phasis, Ister too,
Grew scalding hot, and scorch'd Alpham through.

Hig

His

For

(So But

On

And

The

1

In u

And

And

The

And

The

Grin The

Ne'r

New And

N

ife

v;

d ins 'd;

d.

His headlong Streams down thro'dark Vaults below;
For fafety deep beneath the Seas to flow:
(Some fay 'twas done for Arethusar's sake,
But Poets oft from truth the Fables take.)
On swift Spherchius Banks the Fire took hold,
And burning Tagus flow'd with Liquid Gold.
The snowy Swans in hot Cayster fry'd,
Sung sweetly their own Obsequies, and dy'd.

The Nile by uncouth Fears and Terrors led; In undiscover'd Lands conceal'd his Head; Lest all his Channels choak'd with burning Sand, And Dearth bequeath'd to Egypt's wealthy Land.

Nor could the Thracian Hebrus scape the same, And Strymon perish'd in the dreadful Flame; The Rhine and Rhone were wasted, and the Po, And Tiber where the God's eternal Empire owe. The dismal Gleams shot thro' the rending Ground, Grim Pluto, and his dusky Queen confound; The Sea contracts his Waves, and sandy Fields, Ne're seen before, his spacious Bosom yields: New Rocks and undiscover'd Hills appear, And little Islands scatter'd every where.

The

The Fish dive deep; nor could the Dolphins play On the hot Billows of the boiling Sea:
Along the Beach the parboil'd Sea calves lay Dying and dead; and Nereus too, they say, With Doris and her Daughters lurk'd beneath In hollow Caves, the new too warm, for breath. Thrice furious Neptune rais'd his Shoulders bare Above the Waves, but thrice the glowing Air Check'd the presuming God, and forc'd him down In his own restless Deeps in vain to frown.

But Mother Earth, whom circling Seas embrace, To whose dark Womb the frighted Springs apace Retir'd, with anguish rais'd her reverend Head, Her Face all parch'd, her Colour pale and dead; With her large Hand she veil'd her aged Brows, And sunk a little with Convulsive throws.

Then with a clammy Tongue thus weakly spoke,

If mighty Jove, if unknown Crimes provoke Thy sleeping Vengeance, and this please thee, why Don't thy own Flames, and pointed Lightnings sly At my curst Head? If thou my Fate command, I'll fall content beneath thy powrful Hand;

La

L

T

So

Se

11 0

Y

A

M

Ar

TI

Bo

W

M

WI

Hi

If

Lo

See

Ab

lay

th.

are down

orace.

pace

ad,

id;

VS,

oke,

oke

why

s fly

nd,

r

Let thy revenging Thunders strike the blow;
These Sufferings shameful from their Author grow
Scarce can I speak (hot Smoke her Voice represt)
See how ignoble Flames my Brows invest!
I live in blindness, and in silence choke,
O'rewhelm'd with Ashes, and opprest with Smoke.
Yet to the World a thousand Fruits I bring,
And with a thousand Beauties crown the Spring.
My patient Bosom yearly feels the Plough,
And to the torturing Harrow-tines I bow.
For all my Pains is this the glorious Meed?
These my Rewards, because I kindly feed
Both Men and Cattle, and persume the Skies
With those sweet Odours which from Incense rife?

But grant I merit worse, yet Neptune sure
Might for his Seas a gentler Fate procure;
Why should a Brother's Empire wasted lie?
Himself too, banish'd farther from the Sky.
If neither He, nor I, for help prevail,
Look to thy Heaven, thy lofty Throne may fail.
See how thick Smoke, and sparkling Cinders role
About the Southern and the Northern Pole!

TF

If they take Fire, yon Starry Courts must fall At once, and one vast Ruin swallow all.

Poor Atlas bath'd in dying Sweats appears,
And scarce with pain his fiery Burthen bears:

If Seas, if Earth, if Heav'n it self must burn,
Back to their Ancient Chaos All return;

Help then, great Father, help the World! make hast
Before our hopes, our utmost hopes are past!

So much she spoke, but could no longer bear
The stifling Vapours of the sultry Air,
Into her self then drew her sacred Head
Down towards the cooler Mansions of the Dead.

But Jove affected with her Pray'rs, appeal d To all the Gods, nay, to Himself, who held His Son so dear, that if no helps were found, One horrid Fate must every thing surround.

Then to the highest Arch he bent his way,
Where once his Stores of Rains and Thunders lay,
But found the Clouds consum'd, nor could prepare
New Waters there to cool the burning Air.
Then thundring loud, back to his Ear he drew
His dreadful Hand, and steady Lightning threw

At

At

His

Plu

Th

An

Her

Th

Tor

Scat

Sho

Lik

Wit

Till We

The

And

And

· He

· Hi

T

E

At the blind Charioteer, whose downfal shew'd His Death; so Flames devouring Flames subdu'd.

The Horses, frighted with the thund'ring stroke,
Plung'd off, and in a thousand pieces broke
The Chariots costly Frame; rich Harness here,
And sparkling Reins, and bossy Bits appear;
Here lay the Axtree, there the Spokes; the Beam,
The sacred Relicks of the Golden Team,
Torn by the surious Steeds, at random sly,
Scatter'd through every Quarter of the Sky.

But Phaëton, struck down, with blazing Hair, Shot through the Regions of the dusky Air. Like those thin Meteors which we fancy move, With rapid Course through various Orbs above, Till through clear Tracts illuminated all We see, at least we think we see, they fall. The Po, far from his Native Country, took, (Brook. And wash'd the bloated Corps in his half-wasted

The River-Nymphs his blasted Corps inhume, And fix these Verses on his Marble Tomb; 'Here lies the Boy, who tho too weak to guide 'His Father's Steeds, yet bravely daring dy'd.

The

F 3

haft

d.

y,

W At

The wretched Sire, obscur'd his mournful Face, And let one Day (it's so reported) pass Without the Sun, while Conflagrations made A Day and Light for Burnings past repaid. But when poor Clymene had faid what e're A tender Mothers Passion rais'd could bear, Sad, wild, and with her mighty Woes forlorn, Her Face disfigur'd, and her Vestments torn; O're all the desolated Earth she rov'd, To find His Body whom she fondly lov'd: Those hopes she lost, but still his Bones she fought, She found his Bones, by strange misfortune brough To foreign Shores; When on his Tomb she read The fatal Character, fresh Tears she shed; Fell on the Marble, and renew'd her moan. And with her Bosom warm'd the senseless Stone. His Sifters too bewail his hasty fate, And streams of Tears devoutly consecrate To his lov'd Name; with cruel Hands they rend Their own foft Bosoms; Day or Night no end They find for endless Woes; and still they call On Phaëton, dear Phaëton! but all

Their

Th

He

Fo

W

To

As

Sh

T

T

Bu

L

W

T

0

A

T

Face,

ght,

ugh ead

e. nd

ł

Their Invocations and their Tears are vain. He neither hears their Cries, nor feels their Pain. Four tedious Months by doleful Custom led, ('Twas now their Custom) they bewail'd the When Phaëthus, of three the Eldest, tri'd (Dead. To kneel o'th' ground, Her Feet grew stiff, she cri'd. As fair Lampetie to affift her strove, Short Roots forbad her lifeless Feet to move. The third, quite wild with woes, affay'd to tear The curling Treffes of her Auburn Hair, But tore off Leaves; for lovely Arms and Thighs Large folid Trunks, and spreading Branches rife; While this feem'd strange, the creeping Barks em-(Face: brace

Their Bellies, Breafts and Shoulders, Hands and Only their Mouths call on their Mother's name, And Infant Ecchoes oft repeat the same.

What should she do? Her poor distracted mind To This, to That, to One, to All inclin'd; She kis'd, with cruel loving hands she tore That Barky Vest their changing Bodies wore.

F 4 'heir

She

She broke their tender Boughs, their Boughs around Shed purple drops from every bleeding Wound; Spare me, dear Mother, cries the wounded Maid; Spare me, dear Mother; while she bled, she pray'd; We feel the Wounds you give, fare—as she spoke, The closing Bark her dying Accents broke; (show, The Trees weep still, and those rich Tears they Condenc'd by Sunbeams, precious Amber grow; Which toward our Shores on rouling Surges born, Are still by noblest Roman Beauties worn.

Cygnus, the Son of Sthenelus, was there,
By Birthright much, but more by Friendship dear
To Phaethon; He in Liguria reign'd,
And Pop'lous Realms in wealthy peace maintain'd;
But now he laid his irksome Scepter down,
And for his Friends dear sake resign'd his Crown.
On Po's green Banks, among his kindred Groves,
As the kind Melancholic Cygnus roves.
His strong deep Voice to small fost Notes consumes,
And silver Hairs give place to silver Plumes:
A long white Neck shoots from his downy Breast;
His Toes unite, his Sides fair Wings invest;

A

A bi

So g

But

He

Bro

And

His

As

An

So

An

Wi

An

A

Le

W

If

0

1 und

;

id;

y'd;

oke,

ow,

hey

7;

n,

ar

n'd;

n.

es,

nes,

t;

A

A broad blunt Bill succeeds his Lips; the Man So gently slides into a filver Swan. But still Fov's Lightning glitters in his Eyes; He still distrusts him, and abhors the Skies; Broad Pools and spacious Lakes his Broad desire, And strive in Waters to avoid the Fire.

But Phæbus, of his Darling robb'd, gives o'er His thoughts to Sorrows, and regards no more Those Beauties which adorn'd his looks before; As when some dire Eclipse obscures his Face, And gloomy Horror strikes a guilty Race; So dull, so dark he looks, he hates the Days, And hates himself, and hates his lightsome Rays, With sullen Rage his wasting Grief supplies, And to the frighted World his Beams denies.

Enough, said he, enough we've toil'd of old, And restless Pains for restless Malice sold. Let now some stronger hand the Chariot drive, While I obscur'd in Clouds and darkness live! If You resuse, let your great Master try, Or cast for shame his murth'ring Thunders by; The Jades perhaps may make his Godship know, The Boy, tho weak, deserv'd a foster blow.

Thus Phabus talks, while all the Gods engage With gentlest words to mitigate his Rage;
They beg he would not leave the guiltless World In endless Night, and Desolations hurl'd.
Jove begs his Pardon, nor Intreaties spares,
But mixes Kingly Menaces with Pray'rs.
The God catch'd up his Steeds; his furious look Spoke Grief and Rage; the dreadful Whip he shook
And while he rates and cuts, the trembling Jades
He with his Son's unhappy loss upbraids.

Almighty Jove now walks the Heav'nly round,
To see could any Breach or Flaws be found
Caus'd by the late Combustions; but when all
Prov'd sound above, his next kind Moments fall
On our Terraqueous Globe; above the rest
His own Arcadia strikes his careful Breast. (Shores
The Springs and Brooks lost to their parching
For fear, He to their Ancient Streams restores;
Gives Grass and Leaves again their vardant hues,
And shady Woods and Forest-Greens renews.

While

Arc

His

Of

Bu

He

He

A

No

To

In

Hi

Sh

H

A

70

A

0

I

While thus He comes, and goes, a lovely Maid, Arcadia's Pride, his easy Soul betray'd;
His Eyes dwelt on her, and his Heart bereav'd
Of rest, a thousand hopes and slames conceiv'd.

No Spinster she, nor gay, nor nicely drest, But her loofe Garb a careles Grace exprest; Her Locks scarce ti'd, as negligently flow; Her hand still grasp'd some polish'd Dart or Bow, A Huntress bold, of chast Diana's Train, Nor could a nearer Favourite retain To her Manalian Pleasures, but we fee In Favourites Fortune's Inflability. High Noon was past, when in a Grove's cool shade She loos'd her Bow, and down her Shafts she laid; Her Head did on her painted Quiver rest, And the foft Grass her weari'd Body prest. Fove faw the weari'd Virgin left alone; And fure, faid he, this fure may scape unknown. Or should I meet my Jealous Spouse's Eyes, I'de face her Anger for fo sweet a Prize.

Strait he assumes Diana's Garb and Face;
And what, my Dear, says he, what happy Place Enjoy'd

ge ow,

ld

ok 100k

les nd,

all nores hing

ies,

Thile

Enjoy'd thy envi'd Sports this live-long day?

She humbly quits the Grass on which she lay;

Dear Goddess, hail, said she, more dear than Jove,

More great, more charming, more deserving Love!

Jove smil'd to hear her kind mistake, and prest
Her Crimson Lips, and Snowy panting Breast
With glowing Kisses; and when e'er the Maid,
To tell her pleasant Forest-Tales assay'd;
He stay'd her Speech with such a wanton heat,
As Virgin Lips till then could ne'er repeat.
And such impressions on her Virtues made,
As both his Godship and his Sex betray'd:
Ah! had but Juno poor Calisto seen,
The sight had conquer'd her revengeful Spleen;
When saint and breathless, but in vain, she strove,
For what, poor Maid, could basse lustful Jove?
The lecherous God triumphant mounts the

But she the conscious Groves and Forests slies; A way she hurries, but distracted so, Sh'had almost lost her painted Shafts and Bow.

Skies :

When

W

On

Ty

But

And

An

Ho

Mu

Her

Dia

Her Tv

1

The

And

She

O'er

Let'

ove.

ve!

eft

•

ve,

the

en

When the true Goddess with her Train appear'd On losty Manalus, Calisto fear'd 'Twas Jove again, and from her Call withdrew; But when the Game, and her old Mates she knew, And fear'd no cheat, with a suspicious air And down-cast looks, she'd to her Friends repair. How oft the look betrays the guilty mind! Musing and silent now she lags behind. Her blushes show'd her Virgin sweetness gone, Diana too, if not a Maid, had known Her fault, but all the simp'ring smiling Crew, 'Twas thought, their guilty Sister's failure knew. Nine Months were past, when faint with Summer's heat,

The Goddess finds a cooler Grove's retreat,

Where a small Brook with Popler-shaded, slides,

And o'er smooth Stones with pretty Murmurs chides.

She lik'd the Place, her Foot she gently drew O'er the cool Stream, the cool Stream pleas'd her too.
Let's strip, and wash, said she, for sure this shade
For Vigin-Sports, and Privacy, was made.

Califto

Califo blush'd, the Rest at her command Stript quickly, only She was at a stand; But her officious Mates soon disarray'd Their lingring Sister, and her Crime display'd,

At Her strange Fate amaz'd, she vainly tri'd With both her Hands her swelling Womb to hide: Hence, hence, polluted Wretch, the Goddess cries, These Streams profane not, nor our chaster Eyes. Fierce Juno too, who long had known her Crime, But stay'd her Vengeance to a fitter time; That time now came, and to provoke her more, Calisto now the jolly Areas bore.

Heav'ns Queen faw this, and This alone remain'd, Said she, the World must now be entertain'd With such a Strumpet's Brood! thy Bastard Race Must publish Juno's Wrongs, and Jove's Disgrace. Look for Revenge, I'll quickly change that shape, Those charming Beauties which could tempt a Rape.

She spoke, and in her Hair she twin'd her hands, And drag'd her prostrate siercely o're the Sands. Her Snowy Arms the Wretch for mercy rear'd, Black, hairy, rough, her Snowy Arms appear'd.

Her

H

H

W

A

SI

H

Si

W

A

O

SI

0

A

0

A

OA

H

V

I

Her Hands Divinely white, were turn'd to Paws. Her Fingers, and her shining Nails, to Claws. Her lovely Pace, which drew a God to Sin, Was all deform'd by a prodigious Grin, And left foft Pray'rs should bend her furious mind, She took her Speech, and a rough Note affign'd. Hoarfe, threatning, terrible; but tho' a Bear, Signs still in her of humane Thoughts appear; With deep-drawn Sighs fhe now attefts her Woes, And toward the Stars her wretched Paws the Oft on ingrateful Jove reflects, and tho' (throws, She could not call him, the believes him fo. Oft, of the folitary Woods afraid, About her House, about her Fields, she stray'd. Oft o're rough Rocks before the Dogs she'd ply. And, once a Huntress, now from Huntsmen fly. Oft the her felf from wilder Brutes obscur'd. And, tho' a Bear, no other Bears endur'd. Her felf forgetting, prouling Wolves she fear'd, When her own Father led the Savage Herd. One day her Son, a lufty Stripling grown,

In hunting meets his Mother-Bear unknown,

r'd. Her

d.

d ide:

ries,

es.

ime,

e, 'nd,

ace

race.

pe,

ape.

unds,

While

While through the Forest Lawns for Game he beats, She knew her Son, but he with sear retreats. (Tho' wondring at her steddy gentle Eyes) His Hand then to his fatal Spear applies. Jove stop'd his Hand, and with a winged blast, In upper Skies his dear Relations plac't. Where now from Sorrows freed, and all Divine, In neighb'ring Orbs the Son and Mother shine.

Great Juno swell'd to see her Rival there
With glittering Beams adorn the heavenly Sphere,
Down to her Foster Parent's Court she drives,
Where old Oceanus and Tethys lives,
And with just Reverence to their Silver Hairs,
She thus, when ask'd, her Journeys Cause declares.

Ask you why I Heaven's Queen from yonder Skies 'Am come? A better there my place supplies, Or I'm a Liar, or new Stars you'll see, In this approaching Night's obscurity With hateful Beams I'th' Artic Circle shine, Theirs is the Glory, the Disgrace is mine.

What Whore can fear Immortal Juno's hate?

Alas! I hurt not, I advance their fate;

My

M

A

Su

Bu

Le

In

Let

An

But

Wit

Ne'i

Non

But

And

Pain

As t

Once

Nor

It's fa

And

T

My baffled Power must to this Strumpet bow;
A Brute I made her, she's a Goddess now.
Such Penalties on Guilty Souls I lay,
But Whores and Bastards with my Vengeance play.
Let my chaste Spouse her charming Face restore;
In 10 he assum'd as much before:
Let him leave Me, and put Her Fetters on,
And be devout Lycaon's Vertuous Son;
But I'm your Foster Child, O let my shame;
With some just heat your kinder Breasts inslame!
Ne're let those spurious Stars approach the Deep,
Nor in the purging Ocean's bosom sleep, (keep.)
But their eternal stain, their Whorish Tincture

They grant her wish; away pleas'd Juno flies,'
And through soft Air her painted Peacocks plies;
Painted with Argus Eyes, one kill'd as late, (State;
As thou poor twatling Crow hadst chang'd thy Once spotless Doves no purer White could show,
Nor Geese, to which our Capitol must owe
It's safety; once pure Swans would quit the Field,
And to the Crows diviner Whiteness yield:

My

eats:

t.

,

re,

res.

kies

81

Her Tongue undid her; for her Tongue's delight, A fullen Black fuceeds her spotless White.

The fair Coronis, once Lariffa grac'd, Theffalia's glory; and while close and chafte, Apollo Lov'd her; but Apollo's Bird Her flips discover'd, and inform'd his Lord. His Silence the with flowing Tears implor'd, The Crow her Falshood and her Tears abhorr'd: As on his Errand right, the Tell-tale flew, A prating Daw did all his steps pursue; Ask'd him a Thousand questions in a trice, And, those resolv'd, return'd this kind Advice: Believe my Fateful Tongue, no thanks you'll find To fuch as tell unpleasing truths assign'd: You knew my first, my present Shape; you see The gay rewards of simple Honesty. You've heard of Ericthonius, Sir, one made Without a Mother, him Minerva laid In a close wicker Cheft, and then repairs To Athens, and commits it to the cares Of Cacrops Daughters, Virgins all and Wife, Nor sharers in their Sires Deformities:

The

T

In

Pe

A

W

Bu

Br

To

Ar

A

It

Ser

An

For

As

But

Asl

She

Of

His

The

N

Then gives Command that none should dare to pry Into her fecrets with a curious Eye. Perch'd on a leavy Bough, I watch'd their ways And must fair Pandrofos and Herfe Praise; Who humbly True, observ'd her just Command ; But bold Aglanros, with a daring Hand, Broke up the Cheft, and call'd her Sifter's in To be partakers of her ugly Sin, And to their Eyes expos'd an hideous show! A Youth above, a Dragon all below. I told my Goddess this, and for reward Severely check'd, was thus cashier'd her Guard; An Owl preferr'd before me! by my Fate Forewarn'd, may other Birds forbear to Prate! As for her Service I ne're begg'd the place, But got it merely by Minerva's grace : Ask her, though angry still, she'll be so Just, She'll own I had, but ne're abus'd my Truft.

My Story's known; when Great Coroneus
Of old in Phocis, happy I remain'd (Reign'd
His Virgin-Heirefs; crowds of Lovers made
Their Court to me, and Wealth and Glories laid

G 2

Beneath

Then

d:

ght,

ce:

ee

Beneath my Feet, I scorn'd the whining Crew, By Beauty ruin'd, though despis'd by you. As on the Beach, oft us'd, I gravely mov'd, Neptune observ'd my Face, observ'd and Lov'd; With Pray'rs and tendereft Vows he vainly tri'd To win my Heart; but Mad because deni'd, He offer'd force, I fly, and foundring o're The foft loofe Sand, both Men and Gods implore; No Man could hear, but kind Minerva's aid, A Maid her felf, reliev'd a helples Maid. To Heav'n I rear'd my Arms, black Feathers grew Around my shortning Arms, I thought I threw My Mantle back, my Mantle close adher'd To my black Skin, and shooting Quills appear'd Through Skin and Mantle both; I tri'd to tear My Breasts, but neither Breasts nor Hands were I hopp'd unweari'd o're the moving Sand, (there. Then upper Air with nimble Pinions fann'd. At last a Slave with kind Minerva plac'd, A chaste Attendant on a Mistress chaste; Yet what got I, fince that Incestuous Bird Nystimene, is to my Place preferr'd?

Sure

Car

She

And

And

Our

On

The

Hov

Pha

And

His '

And

Her

Tha

She

Whi

Ther

Whe

Yetv

The

1

Sure you have heard what every Lesbian Child Can tell, How she her Father's Bed defil'd: She's now a Bird indeed, but shuns the Light, And hides her horrid Guilt in gloomy Night; And if by day to look abroad she'll dare, Our Feather'd Armies chase her through the Air.

The Crow fo stopp'd, so vext, May mischiefs fall On you, cri'd he, We fcorn your Omens all! Then on he flies, and to his Lord declar'd, How Ischys in his false Coronis shar'd. Phabus her falshood heard with strange surprize, And jealous fury sparkling in his Eyes; His Wreaths away, away his Harp he threw, And from his Bow a winged Arrow flew; Her Ivory Breafts the bearded Arrow tore, That Breast the God so oft had press'd before; She drew the Steel out with her dying hand, While purple Streams her fnowy Members stain'd: Then with a Deathful Groan, Though Phabus I, When once Deliver'd, might deferve to Dy, Yet why should thy own harmless Infant feel, The fatal Malice of thy murd'ring Steel?

Sure

ore;

rew

N r'd

ır

were nere.

G 3

She

She spoke, but life the hasty Blood pursu'd, And Icy death her Soul-less Limbs subdu'd.

86

The Love fick God too late Repents the Deed. And hates that hand which made his Mistress Bleed, He hates that Tell-tale Bird whose spiteful News. Did jealous thoughts first in his Heart infuse: He curst his Arrows, and he damn'd his Bow, And all his Medic-Arts in vain would show; But heat Divine her Carcafe could not warm. Nor Force of Herbs Fates greater Force difarm. But when the God of all his Arts despair'd, And faw the Pile for her dear Limbs prepar'd; Tho' Gods can't weep, he vents his mighty Woes In difmal Groans, as when with weighty blows, Just in her fight her wounded Suckling falls, And the Horn'd Dam Lows o're her Funerals. Around her now his useless Sweets he laid, And her last Rites with fond Embraces paid; But to fecure his own Immortal Race. He firstch'd his Infant from the fi'ry Place, And his dead Mother's Womb strait off he fends The Babe, and to old Chiron's care commends.

And

Ai

W

Ar

Hi

He

No

000

No

TI

Ar

W

Sh

Au

Ou

Of

In

TH

T

And then at last the Tell-troth Crow requites
With Sable Plumage for his spotless Whites.
The Centaur of his Heavenly Charge grew proud,

And those great Honours to his Art allow'd: His Daughter comes, whose golden Curls adorn Her Shoulders, of the bright Chariclo born, Near some swift stream; and from her Birth-place Ocrroe the Fair, the Wife, and Fam'd, Not for her Father's Arts alone, for the Through Future Fates mysterious Veil could see; And now inflam'd with pure Prophetick fires, While the whole God her larger Breaft inspires, She fees the Babe; Hail, happy Child, fays fhe, Author of Universal Health! to thee Our Mortal Bodies oft themselves shall owe. Oft shall thy skill departed Souls bestow In their old Seats; till Heav'ns revenging stroke Thy ftrange Attempts, and ftrange Success pro-Twice shall thy Life renew, a bloodless Clod (voke: The God shall yield, the bloodless Corps a God.

G 4

And

Ind

ed,

eed,

WS.

oes

vs,

And thou, Dear Father! whose Immortal kind Forbids thy Death, shalt wish some Death to find When touch'd with great Alcides fatal Dart, The fubtle venom's ftrength shall reach thy Heart; Then the kind Parca shall dissolve thy thread, And give thee ease among the sensless dead. She'd fomething still to fay, when Sighs and Tears Deep, thick and flowing all, presag'd her fears; The Fates, faid she, my longer Speech prevent, Ah! happy I with meaner Arts content! I find Heav'as angry when poor Mortals try To read th' Events of dark futurity. Methinks I feem to lofe my Human face. And long for Field-room now, and long for Grass; Into a Mare's (my Kindred Shape) I grow, But why I all, but half my Father's fo? Her latest words by growing griefs suppli'd, In tones confus'd, and undiffinguish'd di'd; She offer'd now at words, and almost Neigh'd, And straight a full-ton'd Neigh her sense convey'd To others Ears; her Arms to Legs were chang'd, And lightly o're the flow'ry Pastures rang'd,

One

One

He

He

For

On

Eni

Apo

Th

Re

Re

Co

Th

Th

But

His

Me

Ar

No

W

Th

To

d rt;

S

d

ne

One Hoof made all her Toes and Fingers one;
Her Head and Neck a longer shape put on;
Her modish Train's last length a Tail was made;
For Hair, a Main in comely Braids was laid
On her fair Neck, and from her Tone and Look, Enippes Name the changing Virgin took.

Old Chiron weeps, and oft implores in vain, Apollo's help; but Fove's Commands disdain The check of leffer Gods; or could thy Arts Rescind his Laws, yet now far distant parts Retain'd thee, and the rich Messenian field Could scope to all thy Shepherds pastimes yield; The Shepherd now the Crook and Pipe disclos'd, The Pipe of Sev'n unequal reeds compos'd; But while he Plays, or only Sings of Love, (rove. His Herds unwatch'd, through spacious Pastures Mercury fees his care, and fev'ral steals, And his rich Prize behind thick Woods conceals. None faw the Thief, but Battus, once a Swain Well known, who long on the Meffenian Plain, The Pylian Kings stud-Mares for Breed had fed, To whom the jealous wheedling Hermes faid:

One kindness, Honest Swain, I must desire, If any should of thee for Strays enquire, Betray not me, and for thy silence take This milk-White Heiser for that Heiser's sake: This Stone, said he, shall sooner tell than I, (And shews a Stone); but Hermes always shy, Seems to go off; returns Transform'd; and strait, Saw'st thou Old Boy! says he, no Thieves of late Drive Bullocks hence? their Thievish haunts And for reward this Bull and Heiser's thine. (assign, Brib'd with a double Fee, cries Battus, There, Beneath those Hills, beneath those Hills they were;

Beneath those Hills, beneath those Hills they were; What, says the laughing God, what Knave! I say, Me to my self, me to my self betray?

To a Mercurial Stone then turn'd his Breast,
And his directing Pow'r is in his Name exprest.

Through yielding Air the God now wings his And thence Minerva's Athens must survey, (way, And the Lycaan Groves; fince then Renown'd For reverend Heads with hoary Wisdom Crown'd.

It was the day when, as old Custom taught, The Virgin Crew to Palla's Temple brought

Their

T

C

T

A

TI

In

T

H

So

H

H

He

To

As

Or

W

70

A

W

H

So

Their Gifts, white Baskets on their Heads they held, Crown'd with fweet Wreaths, with noble Offerings The God on wing observes the lovely Train. (fill'd. As, when from far the fees fome Victim flain. The hungry Vulture many a Circle makes In upper Air, and tho' she ne're forsakes The Game in view, the noify Crowd delays Her Hopes, and Fear her ravenous Pounces stay; So Hermes o're the Town on Lazy Wings Hovers, and makes a thousand gentle Rings; Herfe, the Fair, was always in his view, Herse the Fair, his Wings and Eyes pursue; To whose bright Charms all others yield as far As fmaller Twinklers to the morning Star, Or that fair Star to brighter Cynthia yields, When her full Orb obliging Phabus gilds. Jove's Sons enfnar'd by her furprizing Charms, A glowing Heat his am'rous Bosom warms, Warms first, but then, with unresisted Rage His yielding Soul a thousand Flames engage; So Balearian Bullets rake the Sky, And glow, and melt, as thro' the Air they fly.

ait, te

e, ere; Cay,

his ay,

n'd.

neir

Now

Now down he comes, and his own Form affumes,
And juftly on his own clean Shape prefumes;
Yet tries to mend it with a nicer care,
In fair large Rings he lays his curling Hair.
His Mantle neatly o're his Shoulders throws,
And all the gold and rich Embrod'ry shows.
In Hand his Sleep-commanding Rod he bears,
Polish'd and smooth, and golden Sandals wears.

Three noble Rooms, an inner Court confin'd, With Tortoise Shells, and shining Iv'ry lin'd, On either Hand her Sisters lodg'd; between Was Royal Herse's large A partment seen: The God, with easy steps, approach'd her Bed, Aglauros only wakeful, watch'd his Tread, Saw him, and askt his Name, and what strange Pow'r Employ'd him there at such a Midnight hour? To whom the God repli'd, It's I, who bear Jove's facred Orders through the pervious Air. My Father he: I no sham Cause pretend, Be thou our Consident, our trusty Friend. For Herse's sake I lest those Seats above; O be my Sister, and a Friend to Love!

With

W

A:

Aı Oı

Ol

He

Ar

En

To

Ha

To

WI

De

No

No

Et

No

Im

Be

T)

With fuch false Eyes, Aglauros scan'd him o're, As had Minerva's Secret search'd before.

And for her help a mighty sum demands, Or on the Threshold to exclude him stands.

S,

h

The warlike Pallas with an angry Look Observ'd, and Storms of mighty Passions shook
Her swelling Breast, She dash'd her Gorgon's shield,
And all around with dismal Horror fill'd;
Enrag'd she saw her now, (whose impious Hands,
To see the Monster Her Divine Commands
Had trespassed lately) unto Wealth pretend;
To please a God, and be her Sisters friend.

Then straight to Envies Cell she bends her way,
Which all with putrid Gore infected lay,
Deep in a gloomy Cave's obscure recess,
No Beams could e're that horrid Mansion bless,
No breeze e're fann'd it, but about it roll'd
Eternal Woes, and ever lazy cold.
No Spark shone there, but everlasting Gloom
Impenetrably dark, obscur'd the Room.
Before her Door the fear'd Virago stood,
(Those hated Doors could ne're admit the good)

Then strikes the Lintels with her dreadful Spear. Wide fly the Doors, and all within appear Black impious Scenes, unknown to mortal Eves But Gods can fee through inmost Hells difguise: She fees how the curft Hag with weary'd Jaws, Black Vipers flesh, the food of Envy, chaws. She fees, but foon declines that hateful fight. The ugly Phantome terrify'd with Light; With lazy Streaks rofe from the loathfome Ground And left her half-chaw'd Vip'rous Orts around, Then forward flowly crawl'd; but when she view'd The Goddess with Colestial Charms indu'd; Her Arms all bright, her Face divinely fair, And Blifs and Pleafures in her heav'nly Air, The ill-look'd Hag groan'd deep, and fcru'd her Face To all the Symptoms of a spiteful Grace; A deadly Paleness in her Cheeks was feen; The Skeleton cas'd in a meager Skin; Her Looks awry, an everlasting Scoul Sits on her Brows, her Teeth deform'd and foul! Her Breaft had gall, more than her Breaft could hold; Beneath her Tongue black clods of Poylon roll'd;

Ne

W

H

D

Sh

TI

Sh

AI

Sa

Or

Ar

Be

Th

Ar

He

Th

W

Mu

An

3 10

nA:

and:

ol

w'd

OT

Face

oV.

di.

old;

No

No finiles e'er fmooth'd her furrow'd Brows but those (Woes.

Which rife from common Mischiefs', Plagues and Her Eyes, meer strangers to the sweets of Sleep, Devouring Spite for ever waking keep; She sees blest Men with vast Successes crown'd, Their Joys distract her, and their Glories wound. She kills abroad, her self's consum'd at home, And her own Crimes are her perpetual Martyrdom.

The Goddess loath'd the Witch, but us'd her; Go Said she, the Essence of thy Plagues bestow
On curst Aglauros! thence in haste she slew,
And vanish'd upward like the Morning-dew
Before the Rising Sun: With looks askance
The Hag observ'd the Goddesses advance,
And, grumbling, inwardly repin'd that she
Her too successful Instrument should be.
Then takes her Wand, true Emblem of her mind,
Which ragged Knots and pointed Thorns entwin'd;
Mussled in Pestilential Clouds she moves,
And ev'ry step her fatal instrumence proves;

The flow'ry Corn beneath her footsteps dies, The Grass all scorch'd and desolated lies; Those lively Plants, whose verdant tops appear'd Above the reft, her burning passage sear'd; A wasting Plague her noisome breath projects. And ev'ry Town, and ev'ry House infects. When stately Athens reach'd her gloating Eye, Where Wit, and Wealth, and chearful Peace at vye Together liv'd, her keckfy Carcafe turn'd To fretful tears, and o'er their Bliffes mourn'd. Entring th' Apartment where Aglanros lay In filent flumbers to divert the Day, Her tainted Hands the Virgin's Bosom prest, And thrust sharp Bry'rs quite through her panting The noxious Venom ev'ry Vein inspir'd, (Breaft; And all her Bones with fullen Brivy fir'd. And that she might just ground for Envy find, In Dreams the reprefents to her vext mind Her charming Sifter, and her glorious Fate, Her Love's triumphant, and divine her State; Then paints the Wooing God array'd with light, Supreamly fond, unnutterably bright;

Bach

Eac

And

Ahd

Slow

The

So m

Befor

Her S

As gr

With

But fr

Oft w

"exp

it laf

nd n

The G

nd tr

orbea

nd to

W

Each Object with unwonted Beams supplied,
And her poor felf a foile to charming Herse's Pride.
With such sham Dreams provok'd, Aglaures grieves,

d ye ng

ft;

eli

And fill'd with inward gnawing tortures lives ; slowly she melts, and pines, and wears away The Night with fighs, with reftless fighs the Day. so-melting Ice flides off in filent Streams Before the fetting Sun's rebated beams; Her Sifter's happiness destroys her so; As green moist Weeds in some deep Furnace glow With inward heat, the Pile can never blaze, But smothers off, and all in Smoke decays. of would the wish to dye, as oft engage l'expose the Lovers to a Father's rage; at last before the Door she takes her feat. and makes the Love-fick longing God retreat! he God attacks her with his gentleft Art, nd tries with Love to footh her envious heart; orbear, be gone, fays fire, unmov'd I'll flay, nd to your lawless Passions stop the way.

H

Stay

Stay then for ever there, replies the God;
The Doors then open to his pow'rful Rod.
To stop him, she, in vain, attempts to rise;
A lazy numness seiz'd her Hips and Thighs;
Her Knees grew stiff, and in her Hands and Veins
A deadly cold and bloodless paleness reigns;
And as some fretting Cancerous Humour seeds
On tainted Limbs, and thence to sound proceeds;
So satal Cold lies, softly marches o'er
Her warmer Parts, where Life retir'd before:
She never tri'd to speak, and had she tri'd,
All passage, was to Vocal sounds deni'd;
Her Neck, her Face, her Whole was turn'd to stom
And in her sullen Hue her envious Temper shows

When Hermes thus a just revenge had ta'ne
On sawcy Envy, and a mind profane,
From Athens straight with wonted speed he slies,
And takes his seat again above the Skies;
Whence Jove soon call'd him to himself aside, (hid
And thus with artful Words would his new Passon
Blest Minister, said he, of Heav'ns Decree,
Dear to the Gods, but dearer far to me!

Wi

V

G

0

Si

A

Fo

W

A

By

W

Sh

M

Sm

An

Th

No

WI ne C

With thy us'd hafte go pierce the lightfome Air;
And to fair Sidon's Southern Fields repair;
Godrive that Royal Herd which loofely stray
On yonder Hills, and toward the Beach convey!
Swift as his words, the God performs his Task;
And on the Beach the Herd securely bask;
Where oft Europa with her Mates reforts
For Virgin Pastimes, and for harmless Sports.

Jove knew how ill fost charming Loves agree
With looks severe, and awful Majesty;
And therefore He who rules the trembling World;
By whose stern Hand those Three-fork'd Bolts are hurl'd,

Which rake the lower World; whose dreadful nod Shakes the Globe's huge Machine, that pow'rful Monarch, and Sire of all, converted now, (God, Smooths the grave Frowns of his Majestick Brow; And like a Bull along the Shore He roves, The well-limb'd Monarch of the wandring Droves, Not snows adrift before the Northern Wind, Which Foot ne'er foil'd, nor Southern heat can find, flies,

H 2

Tho

Atone

hows

1e

eins

s eds;

, (hid ecree,

100 METAMORPHOSIS.

Tho bright and glitt'ring in some Scythian Air. Could for pure Whiteness with the Brute compare: His lovely Neck with well-foread Muscles strong; And wond'rous deep his dangling Dewlap hung: His Horns not largely spread, but sharp and clear As Iceicles, or Christal Rocks appear; So fmooth, fo polish'd o'er, you'ld almost own His utmost Art some Workman there had shown-No rage his Eyes, his Brows no terrors wore, But peace and love his gentle Afpect bore: Agenor's Daughter his fair Shape admir'd, And of his gentle Nature oft enquir'd; She saw him gentle, yet with trembling first Stood off, at length encourag'd more, she durst Approach him nearer, and before him stand, And reach him Flow'rs with her delicious Hand. Charm'd with her freedom oft her hands he kift. And scarce could from Love's fiercer Joys defist. With fuch impatience longing Youths receive A kiss, a smile, and with reluctance leave Their utmost coming-blisses just in fight, For the dull Customs of the Bridal night.

Now

No

No

Th

His

Wi

An

By

Th

Mo

An

Th

An

Tro

Wh

No

No

Till

The

Off

His

The

But

Now on the Green the wanton Lover plays; Now on the Beach his fnowy Sides he lays. The Royal Dame, then fearless, strokes his Breast, His Dew-lap with her pretty Fingers preft: With flowry Wreaths the his large Brows adorns. And hangs fweet Chaplets on his glitt'ring Horns; By fuch familiar preludes tempted, The Thoughtless of Harms, and from Suspicions free. Mounts on his Back, while he fubmilly kneels, And extafi'd the Royal Burthen feels; Then on infenfibly his round he takes, And tow'rd the Strand a thousand circles makes: Trots o'er the Sand, now back, now forward goes, Where the fierce Tyde with proudest waters flows. Now feigning Fear, retreats, foon ventures more; Now tries the Seas, and foon returns to Shore; Till all his little wanton Pastime's o'er, The vig'rous God his Virgin-purchase bore Off through the deep, and in its humble Waves His snowy Sides the panting Victor laves. The frighted Maid looks back with longing Eyes, But her right hand still to his Horn applies;

Wow.

are;

ong,

2;

ar

70-ł

d.

ł,

ł.

Her left lay on his Brawny Back reclin'd, Her Vestments spread like Sails before the buxon Wind.

The THIRD BOOK.

The Argument of the Third Book.

Agenor fends Cadmus in fearch of his Daugther who was loft. Cadmus in his fearch Encounters and kills a Dragon, from whole Teeth fown in the Earth, arife a Band of Men, by whose Assistance be Builds the City Thebes. After the Success, bis first Misfortune bappens on account of his Nephew Acteon, who is torn to pieces by his own Pack of Hound. This Difaster pleases Juno, by reason of ber Hatred to Se mele, who had been debanch d by Jupiter. Juno therefor taking the Resemblance of Berea, (Semele's Nurse) procure ber Death. A Controverly afterwards betweet Jupiter and Juno, whether the Male or Female had the greater Sanfaction in coitu. Tirefias chosen Umpire, who had expuis ene'd both Sexes. He decides the Question against Juno; wh in Revenge deprives bim of his Sight. Jupiter in Recompene in pires him with the Gift of Prophecy. His first Prediction confirm'd in Narcissus, who despu'd all Nymphs (and among ft the rest, Eccho, who for Love pin'd ber felf in a Voice). He grows enamour'd on bimfelf, and languishis into a Flower. Pentheus still derides the Prophet, but em firms his Sanction by his own Tragick End; which occasion a general Veneration for the Rites of Bacchus.

Pragon, Aren, ter the Vepbew Hounds to Soberefore trocura ex and Sanife expericompens ediction (and celf into inguillis but emoccasimi

W Pr

Ut now the luftful God no more conceal'd. Confess'd the Thundrer, and the God reveal'd, Th' Impatient Lover And his own Crete When the fad Parent, ignorant that Tove Prefer'd his Daughter, and enjoy'd her love: Bids Cadmus trace and find the ravish'd Fair, Or hope no more to breathe Phanician Air. Both just and wicked in the fame Defign: The care was Pious, but too great the Fine. The World fearch'd o're in vain. (For what Man cou'd Smell Jove's Rapes out, or nofe the Bestial God?) The profcrib'd Agenorian Youth retires, And some new Seat at Phabus's Shrine requires When thus the God,

- 'In defert Grounds where Mortals feldom stray,
- ' A Cow shall meet thee, and direct thy way;
- 'Untam'd as yet, and by no Service broke,
- Impatient of the Plow, nor fubject to the Yoke.
- Led by this guide, go forwards on, and choose
- That place to build in she does for Repose.

'Then

194

f Then fence th' appointed Ground on every fide,

And call the Land Baotia from your Guide. Scarce can the Youth descend into the Plain, And the Castalian Mountains Valley gain; But fees th' ungranded Beeft walk on before, Whose unraz'd Neck the Marks of freedom bore. He follows flowly on with humble pace, And thanks the God that pointed out the place; When fording o're the Streams, Cephifus yields, And past the Limits of Panopean Fields. The brawny Guide stood still, and bellowing (ground, round.

Brandish'd her spacious Horns, and spurn'd the And the shrill Air restor'd the dreadful sound; Thus pois'd, the next the following Train furvey'd, Then on the yielding Grass her pond'rous Members laid.

The fignal giv'n, Cadmus no more delays, But pays his thanks, and tenders Heav'n his praise; Kisses the Ground, and greets the foreign Soil, And Fields not yet manur'd by humane Toil.

H

U

A

TI

Its

N

'N

Ai

A

A

C

A

Sa

W

Fi

H

T

He now to Jove a Sacrifice prepares,

(Jove for his Sifters Sake Should hear his Pray'rs.)

And for this end, commands his Servants bring

The clearest Waters of the living Spring.

An aged Wood look'd o're the neighb'ring place,

[pace,]

Its Limbs well-grown, and wondrous was its Nor by the Ax prophan'd, nor conscious of disgrace. 'Midst of the Grove, the gaping Earth had made An humble Shelve, and fenc'd it with the Shade; Arch'd in its form, which Stones cemented gave, And well concurring justled to a Cave; Clear rising Springs gush from its wounded sides.

Clear rifing Springs gush from its wounded sides, And round its fertileWomb the rillingWater glides.

A monstrous Snake was Tenant of this place,
Sacred to Mars, and of no Vulgar Race,
With gilded Crest, and of stupendious Size;
Fire darted thro' his Scales, and sparkled thro' his Eyes.

His Body poyson, Venome in his Breath,

Three flaming Tongues, three murding tire of Teeth.

He

re.

ng id,

y'd,

bers

ife;

Soon as the Tyrians reach'd the deftin'd Ground,
And the dipp'd Pitcher gave the warning found,
Rous'd by the noise, and ftartled from Repose,
The Serpent rais'd his Head, and hissing rose;
Nor longer could their Hands, their Urns retain,
Their Blood stood still, and chill'd in ev'ry Vein;
Fear, and their trembling Limbs provok'd their
But Nerves contracted, sickn'd at the sight. (slight,
He the mean while in slimy Circles roves,
Leaps twining on, and bends him as he moves,
And more than half suspended in the Air,
Looks down upon the Wood, and views it from afar.
His bulk no less than his, whose wondrous growth Divides the Bears above, and almost touches both, ŀ

F

W

H

T

Nor idly stops the Beast, nor winding lies
In lazy Folds, but bounds upon his Prize;
(Whither the trembling Bands for Arms prepare Or Flight, or both were hindred by their fear)
O're those the treble Sett of Teeth prevail,
And those, the close Embraces of his Tail;
From diff'rent Causes, diff'rent is their Death,
Fate follows ev'ry touch, and reigns in ev'ry Breath.
And

And now the Sun in full Meridian, made
The Clouds decrease, and less ned every shade,
When Cadmus wondring at his Servant's stay,
Seeks out the cause, and tracks em in the way.
A Lion's Skin he on his shoulders wore;
And Spear and Lance of burnish'd Iron bore:
But his undaunted Soul secure from harms, (Arms.
Was brighter than his Dart, and stronger than his eir

:

ht,

far.

wth

h.

6

And

Entring the difinal grove, the Heroe found
His dead Attendants grinning on the ground,
And perch'd upon the Stain, the spacious Beast
Lick'd o'er their Wounds, and joy'd amidst the Feast.
When thus — or I'll revenge my Servant's Fate,
Or dying too, commence their mournful state.
He spoke, and in his Right hand pois'd a Stone;
And thus, said He, thou shalt thy guilt atone:
Then with great force the lab'ring Burthen threw,
Wing'd to the work of Fate, and grumbling as it flew. (crush'd,

When the like force the mighti'st Walls had And crumbled half their Fabrick into dust;

Prop'd

Prop'd on himself, the Serpent stood the blow,
And from his scaly Coat return'd it on the Foe:
His Hide the stone's unerring stroke repell'd,
His Hide perform'd the duties of a Shield.
But the strong Jav'line urg'd with more success,
Baffl'd the Scales, and gain'd an open pass;
Whirl'd in between the spinal Sinews six'd, (mix'd.
Half buri'd in the Wound, and with his Entrails

Stung by the stroke, and heightned by the smart,
He twines his Neck, and views the wounded part,
Then with his well-set Grinders champs the Dart.
Which after various tugs, and long essays,
Scarce quits its hold, or leaves th' envenom'd place;
Nor yet deserts it wholly, for the point,
Riveted in, is fastned through the Joint.
But when at last the dire contagious Wound (round;
Shoots through the Blood, and deals th' infection
Provok'd to anger, and his wonted height
Of rage, his Throat expands it self to sight:
White soaming froths around his Jaws exhale,
And the lash'd Earth is plow'd by ev'ry Scale:

Black

B

So

N

T

A

Ca

Th

Kee

He

Bite

The

And

The

B

Spui

But

Black steams that from his livid Nostrils rife. Pollute the vicious Air, and dare the Skies. Sometimes the parts in twining folds combine, Now at full length are straitned to a line. Then he rowls, rushing forward like a Flood, And with well-hard'ned Breaft bears down the flubborn Wood.

d.

ils

3 æ;

id;

on ck

Cadmus gives way, and with the Lyon's Hide Sustains the shock, and checks the brutal Pride; The Lance extended, stops him in his courfe, Keeps him at bay, and curbs the distanc'd Force. He the mean while impatient of delay, Bites the sharp Spear that guards th' expected Prey ; Then foams and yells aloud, and bites again, And his fix'd Teeth the bearded point retain; The bearded point's entire, nor feels th' intended pain.

But now the Blood trill'd from his pois nous Head, Spun freely forth, and streaming as it bled; But yet the Wounds were shallow, for the Beast Retreated from the Dart, and twisted round his (Creft; (Creft; puil

Warding

Warding the deadned fury of the blow,
By drawing back, and shrinking from his Foe.
When pressing on, and greedy of the fight,
Cadmus pursu'd, and chas'd him in his slight;
Till hindred from retiring, by an Oke
That stopp'd him, and oppos'd him to the stroke;
The Jav'lin met him as he turn'd about,
And with the Tree transfix'd the Monster's Throat,
Whose Trunk enseebled with its burthen groan'd,
And mourn'd the weight each drooping Bough disown'd:

Now whilst the Victor view'd the vanquist'd This Voice was heard (but from no certain place) Why does Agence's Son survey the Slain.

Or wonder at his bulk, or grizly Main?

Your Body shall it felf the Figure take,

Which you the subject of amazement make.

Astonish'd at the Voice, and Fate design'd,

He lost his Eyeballs, and perplex'd his mind:

His rowling Eyeballs, and his stiffned Hair,

Told no slight grief, and spoke on common fear.

When

F

1

A

So

D

T

It

When round the Sphere the Clouds divided play. And for some facred passage shoulder out the way: And lo! the Goddess Pallas to his aid! (Pallas had him her darling Fav'rite made.) ' She bids him turn, and plough the clotted Barth. 'Then fow the conquer'd Teeth, and wait the birth. Obedient to the Goddess her Command. He wounds the Ground, and furrows o'er the Land. Scatters abroad the monftrous Seeds, and then Expects till they should shoot themselves to Men. When (fearce to be believ'd!) the Glebes began To move, and give progressive signs of Man; First, tops of Pikes sprout upwards, and appear; Next Helmets nod, and crefted Feathers rear; Then Breaft and Shoulders rife, with other parts, And well-arm'd Hands exert their pointed Darts; Perfect at last, in ev'ry limb they move, And rang'd in order, feem another Grove. So when an Opera's acted, and the Scene Drawn back, discloses the design'd Machine, Th' Image ascends thus by degrees, and shews Its face at first, and as it rifes grows;

ar

ke;

oat

d, ugh

ace,

ifrd

(90

W hen

METAMORPHOSIS.

At length fcrew'd up, and fix'd upon its Feet; -Erects it felf, and treads the Stage compleat.

Disturb'd at this new Foe, Cadmus prepares For Arms, and girds himself again for Wars.

· Think not of Arms, (cries one) nor hoftile Rage;

Earth's Sons, will only Sons of Earth engage;

These Weapons on our selves are only bent;

Our Death's design'd, but not thy Ruin meant:

He spoke, and in pursuance to his word,

Grapples his Earth born Neighbour with his Sword;

Gives him a Death, and sheaths it in his Heart;

Then wounded from afar, he tumbles by a Dart.

Nor longer than the Slain the Conqu'ror lives,

But renders up that Breath which he but then re-

Urg'd by the dire Example all the rest, By mutual Wounds are mutually opprest.

Now on the ground the short-liv'd Warriors lies

And bite their Parent Earth, and bleeding dye.

The mighty Numbers dwindle into five;

'Mong whom Echion fortun'd to furvive,

And he by Palla's order, on the Grass

Flings down his Arms, and begs, and gives a Peace:

Thefe

T

W

To

Ver

So

An

Bu

Ar

No.

Gu

Amie

Thy

Stran

And I

Taugl

ut af

No fai

ft

These were the sole Assistants then remain'deed to When Cadmus built the City Phabus had ordain 1.0 And now Thekes flood , when Cadebue thou . Well Rock'd with Game, and man Andeim in T'enjoy thine Exile, hightned in esteem ibsoft To Gods related, and to Heave allided won by A Venus and Mars the Parerts of thy Bride ords and So many Sons and Daughters grac'd thy Line? bal And these young Men adopted now for thine many But Man should the decisive moment wait, And the last Gasp the test of humane States Nor be reputed happy till this Urn bbs aud ba A Guards him from Chance, nor lets his Fortune curding New and Spens confer the curd's Amidst this Chain of prosperous Affairs, deson 1. Thy Nephew first link'd in encroaching Cares. trange Horns which on his rugged Forehead flood, stemin the mises some sale of the and Dogs that feafted on their Master's Blood, laught thee to grieve, and make the Maxim good ut after just enquiry, you can find the anac In lo fault in him, but only Fate unkind :

e, d;

rees:

ë:

efe

Í

For how could Ignorance a Crime be thought,

Well stock'd with Game, and timetur'd with the

And now the Sun with more exalted Ray,
Shone thro' the Skies, and grad d the middle way,
And Shades decreating fled, and all was Day.
When the Bestian Youth half spent with heat,
Will'd a refreshment, and propos'd Retreat,
Call'd off the Scent, and sounded in his Hounds,
And thus address'd his Friends, who bear the bushy Grounds.

- Our reeking Nets and Spears confess the Prey;
- "Enough fuccess has crown'd the present Day.
- When the next dazling Morn informs our fight,
- And on its Saffron Wheels reftores the Light.
- 'We'll to the Sport again, and nimbly trace
- 'The feudding Deer, and then purfue the Chafe.
- 'Now its high Noon, and feorthing Phobas gilds
- All parts alike, and chops the gaping Fields.

(

27

F

0

T

Its

W

Ti

Ar

Stop the pursuit, and cease from further Spoils, 'And on your backs support the knotty Toils.

Each Man consenting seem'd to rest inclin'd,

Left off the Chase, and did the Work enjoyn'd.

A filent Vale stretch'd out beneath, display'd The Shades that Rosin Trees and Cyprus made. Gargaphie, call'd, Diana's own Retreat, Her Hunting-lodge, and more peculiar Seat; One end of which a verdant Grott contain'd, Not grav'd by curious Art, but Nature feign'd; Nature so nicely had dissembled Art, 'Twas regular and just in ev'ry Part. For sloping to an Arch the Pumice grew, And Topazes a roof'd resemblance drew; On the right Hand a Crystal Fountain wash'd The mouldring Earth, and murmur'd as it pass'd, Its Brims edg'd o're with Grass, and bord'red round With Green, the native Liv'ry of the Ground.

Here us'd the Sylvan Goddess to resort, Tir'd with the Chase, and weari'd with the Sport, And suppling o're her stiffned Nerves, betray Those Graces which around a Goddess play.

2

Arriving

Stop

113

he is,

Ohy

V.

ht,

fe.

ilds

116 METAMORPHOSIS.

Arriving at her usual Bath, the Brook,
One of her menial Nymphs her Weapons took.
Another (Mistriss of the Wardrobe) held
Her Mantle which her Breasts and Arms reveal'd.
Each Nymph employ'd her self as she was plac'd,
Whilst Two the Buskins of her Feet unlac'd.
But Crocale more skilful in her Trade,
Bound up her Hair, which o're her Shoulders plaid,
Curl'd it to Plaits, and ty'd it in a Noose,
Her own dishelv'd, and negligently loose.
Nephele, Trecas, Rhanis, (and the Herd
Of undistinguish'd Wenches not preferr'd)
Her snowy Limbs, and Iv'ry Members lav'd
With Water, which capacious Urns receiv'd.

But whilst the fair Titania bath'd, and these Disclos'd themselves, and frisk'd about at ease. With dubious Steps, and unsuccessful pace, Lo! Cadmus's Nephew stumbled on the place; Where when the destin'd Wretch was come, and ey'd Those Parts which Nature had his Sex deny'd, The naked Nymphs into a Cluster ran, And skulk'd at first appearance of a Man;

Then

T

T

B

0

R

So

Sh

A

Ti

TI

H

Bu

A

H

A

Pr

1

Then for a Screen around Diana stood

And beat their Breasts, and shreik'd, which eccho'd through the Wood.

Their forward Zeal, their weak attempts confest. The Goddess tow'rd exalted o're the rest: And as Clouds warm'd by th' reflecting Sun. Blush and dilate the Colours, not their own: Or as the fair Aurora's modest Ray, Reddens at fight of Phabus, and the Day; So look'd Diana, and with fuch furprize Shot forth her Charms, furvey'd by mortal Eves: And the hem'd in by her attendant Train. Turn'd sideways, and scowl'd backwards on the Man. Then wish'd for Arms; but fruitless wishes made, Her Arms at Land, next other helps effay'd, But nought but Water feem'd to promise aid. And this she scoop'd with Virgin-hands, and dash'd His manly Face, and hairy Temples wash'd; Adding these words as witness of her hate, Preceding words which usher'd in his fate. 'Now boast vain Man, I give thee leave, thou'ft seen 'A naked Goddess, and divulge her Mein:

ď

d, en

Boast if thou canst, -- nor threatning further cross'd,
And sprinkled on, and frown'd him to a Beast.
Plac'd on his Brow long Antlers of a Deer;
Enlarg'd his Neck, and tip'd each lengthned Ear:
His Hands clove into Feet, and Arms declin'd
To spiny Legs, and trembled as they joyn'd.
A spotted Hide enclos'd his manly Skin,
And fear, unknown before, was added too within.

Compleat, and chang'd all o'er, Actaon fled, And wondred at his swift unusual Speed; Then as he in the watry Mirror gaz'd, Shrunk backwards, at his spacious Horns amaz'd. Woes me! he would have said, but gap'd in vain; The Voice were Sighs that answer'd to the strain. Tears from his borrow'd Face ran trickling down; Nought but his former Mind remain'd his own. What measures should he take, or home return, And at the Court his new Dishonours mourn? Or lurking in the Woods, shun humane sight, And ev'n himself retreating from the Light? Fear this forbad, and that disswading Shame, As not consistent with the Regal Name.

Whilft

T

B

T

C

S

И

I

0

Mourner

Whilft thus he with his doubtful Paffions frove, The Dogs beheld and spi'd him through the Grove. Blackfoot and Tracer, opining led, the Chafe; One Cretan tother pupp fre Sparten Race: Thence rush'd the yelping Pack; as swift as Wind, Clime-cliff and Quicklight of Arcadian kind; Stout Kill deer, Rau'ner, Lightfoot, bounding went; Whirlwind for Swiftness Hunter for the Scent & Next Woodman, wounded by a Tusky Bears 10 Beater, whose Sire was Wolferand divers mone. Then Shepherd, once a five and uside lenep ! The Fold from wandring, and fecure the Sheep! But now promoted to the Chafe differentingmI Such fervile Cares, and base inglarious Pains no 1 Forgets his former busine is as he runs of ord I Now company for Greedy and her Sons. 1104 Ganch'd Catch prey lately truss'd, no forward sprung, With Courfer, Noify, Tyger, Spot, and Strong; Smut in black hair, and Beauty cloth'd in white, Good runners both, and excellent in flight ; ove ... Roystern for firength, and Tempest fam'd for speed; Salvage, with's Brother Walf, of Cyprian Breed:

I 4

file

Alas!

d,

.

in.

d.

n;

vn:

Mourner and Smarch, marked on their Sable Necks
With Silver Spots, and Brows with Starry Streaks:
Then followed Intiffling Shap, a well-beaked Hound;
And Ringwood mark the fales and Hills rebound.
Then frank flern'd Jowler and Smooth Lady, which Ow'd their high Birth to a Laconian Bitch.
Their Shou choice Distream Dog, who came Of noble Blood, and of diffinguished Fame;
Others polides, definition of the Frey, (delay.
Jumped forth, whole Names would only cause

Thus a full city the thrill Sagacious Pack,

Thus Rocks, and theep Afcents purfu'd the Frack;

Impervious Cliffs, and Graggy Mountains paff,

Non Backs, nor Bogs, nor Buffes flop'd their haft;

Thro' Roadschoak'd up with Stones and Briers they run 1902 and bus various of the

Thro Registered Partis, and made a Path if none.
Wing doo the Flight, and trembling as he moves,
He skims along, and thuns his darling Groves:
Groves which before the Princely Sports-man

The Came pursuing, not the Game pursu'd.

Moureer

Alas!

Al

An

Fai

IA

But

Gre

And

Wi

Fir

Hil

Th

Car

WH

And

In r

Mu

Scar

He

s:

i;

h

S ıy.

ile

k;

UH

H.

iey

e.

s, nan

Sei

as!

Alas! he flies, his own Domestick Slaves,
And turning as he runs, a seeming pity craves.
Fain would he cry, perswaded by his sear,
I am Action; Lo, your Master here!
But words are wanting, and th' intended Voice
Groans forth a sad confus'd impersect Noise.
And now the Dogs almost upon him prest
With fury to the Prey, and their loud Cries encreast.

First Collier fastned on his Haunch; and next Hilbred and Ranger on his Shoulder fix'd:
These started last, but crossing o'er the Ground,
Came in the first, a nearer Passage found.
Whilst these upon their wretched Master hung,
And stop'd his Course, and grip'd him as they clung;
In rush'd the distanc'd Pack, and yelping wide,
Muzled him o'er, and beak'd on ev'ry side.
And now pink'd o'er with Wounds each part

And now pink'd o'er with Wounds each part

Scarce any further work for Death remains.
He groans and Sighs, fuch Accents from his Breast;
If not a Man, yet much unlike a Beast.

Then

Then suppliant on his Knees, like one that wou'd Have something like Petition understood; Turns round his mournful Looks, as if they were His Hands, and in the whining Act of Pray'r.

But his Companions with their usual Cries,
Chear up the Dogs, and seek him with their Eyes;
Attaon call, Attaon absent blame,
He moves his Head, which answers to the Name.
But ign rant they reproach his long delay,
And wish him at the Slaughter of the Prey.
Consenting to their wishes, he'd have seen
His Dogs thus feasting, not their Banquet been.
But present feels their griping Phangs, which tear
Their Master not as such, but as a Deer.
Nor could, or less, or milder Wounds asswage
A Goddess Anger, or Diana's Rage.

The talk was doubtful as the rumour grew,

For Folks will censure every thing that's new:

Some thought the Maiden Goddess too severe,

And blam'd her Anger, and accus'd her Fear.

Others, more nice, absolv'd her question'd Fame,

As worthy of her Yows, and Yirgin Name:

Bo:h

B

0 70

V

T

Sh

A

A

W

TH

Ar

Re

Ev

Bu

'T

A

· 'S

· If

S A

ď

re

S;

36.

13

e!T

ear,

NI

Ensi

me,

Bo:h

Both gave their Reason, as they gave their Thought, Or prais'd ber Justice, or excus'd bis Fault.

Jove's Wife stood Neutress, nor so much decreed Which side to savour, as she lik'd the Deed.

The Tyrian Strumpet, and Agenor's, Race, Shot anger through her Soul, and urg'd disgrace; A fresh occasion sann'd the former slame, And summon'd all her harred as it came.

The teeming Womb of Semele betray'd What progress Jove's Almighty Seed had made. This, and her Passion swell'd her rising Veins, And gave her Tongue (as Women will) the Reins. Resolv'd to chide the faithless God, and prove, Ev'n to the Letcher's face her injur'd Love. (tain'd, But—'What have my Complaints, she said, ob-what redress my slighted Beauty gain'd?

&#x27;The Jilt her felf is worthy Juno's aim,

&#x27; And dying shall atone for Juno's Fame.

&#x27;Sdeath her - nor shall she long my Bed enjoy,

&quot;Tis her, my hated Rival, I'll destroy:

&#x27;If I am Queen of Heav'n, and justly great,

And pow'r and strength attend my Pompous State,

124 METAMORPHOSIS.

- No Pageant prop'd with Titles, or ador'd
- ' With Mock-Devotion, Sportive Joys afford,
- But doubly to the Mighty Jove alli'd,
- ' His high-born Sifter, and exalted Bride.
- ' Sure I'm his Sifter ____ tho' his Deeds proclaim
- ' The Bride an empty found, and aiery Name.
- Perhaps --- had only bare fruition cloy'd
- ' Her craving Lust, and ended when enjoy'd;
- ' She'd pals unpunish'd as the num'rous rest,
- ' My Bestial God in Bestial Shapes comprest.
- But she conceives --- and as in triumph bears
- A Child, the cause of all my present Cares:
- 'Twas this the wanted, and her Womb declares,
- Gove was not impotent to grant her Pray'rs.
- In what my choicest Hopes could scarce succeed,
- She gains with eafe, and teems with heav'nly
- Whilft I receive no more than cold remains
- Of Jove, and languid Jove without his Veins.
- So much the Jilt relies upon her Face,
- " And vainly trufts in ev'ry mortal Grace;
- But help me Malice, and affift the Cheat,
- ' May her own Jove prepare the dire Deceit :

And

H

Ŵr

The

To

Her

Till

Plac

Wor

Furr

And

Her

And

Like

In all

Ther

Tof

And her own Jove (or I renounce my claim

n

s,

And

'To Heav'n, and Heav'ns high Queen, Saturnia's

'His gugan Trifle shall himself betray, (Name,)

'And plunge her down to Hell beyond the reach of day. (arose,

She fooke - and murm'ring from her Throne Wrap'd in a Cloud she for her Mantle chose: Thence big with ills, yet undifcover'd came To Semele's Abode, the witness of her Shame: Her cloudy Vail, and aiery form retain'd, Till the the marks of injur'd Age had fein'd: Plac'd on her Temple's flight decaying Hairs, Worn out by time, and fnow'd upon by years; Furrow'd her wrinkled Skin in ev'ry place. And dragg'd her bending Limbs with feeble pace. Her mournful Voice was with her strength deprest, And whin'd out Tones confiftent with the rest; Like Semele's Old Epidaurian Nurse. In all her fondling Actions and Discourse. Therefore when after various Chat, they came To speak of Yove, and lit upon his name.

She figh'd and - 'Would 'twere Jupiter; but fear

- And much suspect him personated here.
- For tis a common Trick, and much in use,
- When a young Virgin fuffers an abuse,
- "To counterfeit and palliate the Defign,
- With a God's name, which makes the Fact Divine.
- ' Nor is't enough he represents great Jove,
- Let him give Nervous tokens of his Love;
- Such lafting Efforts, and Coelettial Charms,
- ' As when he lies diffolv'd in Juno's Arms,
- With all the shining Ensigns of his State,
- Your Joys as perfect, as his Strength is great.
  By Tuno's words thus ignorantly fram'd,

She begg'd of wanton Jove a Gift unnam'd.

When thus the kind conferring God repl'd,

- 'Speak but thy Choice, it shall not be deni'd.
- " And to confirm thy Faith, let Singian Gods,
- And all the Tenants of Hell's dark Abodes
- Witness my Promile, these are Oaths that bind,
- And Gods that keep, ev'n Jove himself confin'd.

  Transported with the sad Decree, she feels,

  Ev'n mighty satisfaction in her Ills;

And

A

Be

N

He

(B

TH

Sh

Up

An

TH

Su

Wi

An

Ye

To

fear

And just about to perish by the grant,

And kind compliance of her fond Gallant, barn said

Bespeaks him thus

'Affume Jove's Vigour, as you own Jove's Name,

'The same the strength, and Sinewy force the

'As when you mount the great Saturnia's Bed,

'And lock'd in her embrace, diffusive glories shed.

The Voice was out, and mix'd it felf with Air.

Nor could the God recall the Mortal's Pray'r.

He wish'd indeed the fad request unmade

(But Heav'n it felf ean't alter what is faid);

There was a like fatality in both; o lie b dono? and

She could not change what's ask'd, nor He his Oath.

Up to the Skies unwilling Jove return'd,

And Semele's Misfortune deeply inburn'd : 1961 0161

Thea to the work of Fate the afficied God.

Summon'd the Clouds obedient to his Nod, liston.

With these he showrs, and lambent Lightning join'd,

And fwift unerring Thunder mix'd with Wind.

Yet that he might their baneful Force allay.

Took half their force and wonted Strength away.

And

ind.

in'd.

Nos

ine.

128 METAMORPHOSIS.

Not arm'd with that, or strong-bolt dreadful Fire, That made his hundred handed Foe retire:

'T was much too cruel for the present use,
Not sit for her to bear, or him to chuse.

There was a lighter Bolt the Cyclops fram'd,
Less raging, and less hurtful, and instam'd;
Gods call't Jove's second-rated Dart, and this
He took, as proper for such work, as his.
Entring her House, with all his Heav'n array'd,
She trembled at the Flame, which round her play'd;
Nor could her Mortal Body bear the sight
Of glaring Beams, and strong Coelestial Light;
But scorch'd all o're, with Jove's embrace expir'd,
And mourn'd the Gift so eagerly desir'd.

Her Infant, yet imperfect, and unmade,
Into the Father's Thighs by slight convey'd,
Waits till his Mother's Time's compleatly run,
And all the Rights of reg'lar Broeding done.
Ino by theft first takes him to her care,
And Suckles him, as other Infants are;
For Nurses next Nysaan Nymphs are giv'n,
Who keep him close as Bastard Son of Heav'n;

And

İ

N

A

70

Sp

A

W

No

To

WH

Mu

Fun

Her

At I

And

With

Tot

Tiref

Expe

And when brought up with Food his Years require, He'll climb the Spheres, and Whore as stoutly as his Sire. Now whilst these things were acted here on Earth, And Nymphs conceal'd young twice-born Baschus Birth:

Tove, as they fay, well fleep'd in Nectar, grew Sportive (as sometimes Deities will do.) And all his Cares and Bus'ness laid aside. Was pleas'd to be facetious with his Bride. Nor was the Jolly Goddess less dispos'd To mirth, and fo a Topick was propos'd; When Your Toys are greater, and prevail Much o'er the feeble Pleafures of the Male. Juno denies, and earnest to confute Her leering Spoule, grows hot in the Dispute. At length to finish the laborious Strife, And fet things right again'twist Jove and's Wife; With one confent the bus'ness was referr'd To the decisive Judgment of a Third; Tirefias was the fittest Man they knew Experienc'd in Male Joys, and Female too.

re.

An

1. 2

d;

d,

130 METAMORPHOSIS.

For as two Snakes in civil freedom lay Engendring cheek by chowl, as fure they may, The stern Philosopher's Sagacious look Could not fuch rude undecent Courtship brook, But hindred the Diversion with a stroke. When he (and'twas sufficient penance for't) Was chang'd to a Retainer for the Sport, Made Woman, and in that most lewd Vocation, For his Instruction ferv'd fev'n years probation; When on the Eighth (tho it was wondrous strange That Sex could flay fo long without a change ) Again he faw them in the fame condition, As in their first unmannerly coition. ' If from a blow (he faid) fuch changes rife, 'That he that strikes your Bodies, loses his; 'I'll try what now the Magick stroke can do, And his first form succeeded to the blow: With all the manly figns of Propagation, And Tokens requifire for the begetting flation. He therefore being chosen Arbitrator Of this litigious mighty little matter,

Gave

0

W

0

To

Ga

M

Ar

An

To

He

Lir

Wh

She

Difc

Love

Con

Vain And Gave up the Cause to Jove, which you may guess Vex'd Juno damnably, nor could it less.

She therefore set her Wits at work, to find A punishment, and made Sir Tell-troth blind. When Jove All-pow'rful, but in this, (for none Of all the Gods can make what's done undone)

To recompense his Judge for being blind, Gave him for want of Eyes, the light of mind. Made him a Fortune-teller, and the Gain And Fame together much outweigh'd the Pain.

This quickly spread abroad the Prophet's Name,
And fill'd Aonian Cities with his Fame.
To whatsoe're th' enquiring People crave,
He unexceptionable Answers gave.
Liriope's Mischance his words fulfill'd,
Whom heretofore Cephisus got with Child.
She pregnant grew, and when her time was come,
Discharg'd a Lovely Infant from her Womb;
Lovely ev'n then; Narcissus was his Name:
Concerning him they to the Prophet came,
Vainly inquiring if the Child shou'd thrive,
And to the Winter of old Age arrive.

ange

122 METAMORPHOSIS.

If he ne'er knows himself, says he, he may.

But long conceal'd the doubtful meaning lay.

At last his Death, his Madness, and his Pain,

Did the Prophetick Sense too well explain.

For when he had fulfill'd his thrice third Year,

And might at once Toung man and Boy appear.

Much did the Touths, the Virgins lov'd him much;

But yet his inbred Stubbornness was such,

That neither cou'd the wish'd-for Prize obtain:

In vain the Touths the Virgins lov'd, in vain.

When to his Nets he drove the trembling Deer, Him Eccho faw, Eccho that can't forbear To answer what she hears, yet never cou'd Speak first, but only answer thro' the Wood. A Body then she was, not only Sound, Yet of her Tongue no other use was found Than now she has; which never cou'd be more Than to repeat what she had heard before. This Change impatient Juno's Anger wrought; Who when her Jove, she o're the Mountains sought, Was oft by Eccho's cheating Voice missed, Whilst the shy Nymphs to Caves and Grotto's fled.

Cu

Co

He Slil

Gre

To Hò

In t

Nat She

Yet She'

Вус

Cry

Com

Hel

App

Which when inrag'd Saturnia faw, she said, Curst be the Voice by which I've been betray'd. Th' Event confirms the Menace. Eccho straight Cou'd only the last Words and Sounds repeat.

When thro' the Woods she saw Narcissus rove. Her heart grew warm, and straight she fell in love. Slily the did his wandring fteps purfue; Greater her flame, as she approach'd him, grew. Just as the Sulphur draws the attractive heat To every part, foon as the Torch is light. How often wou'd she, if she cou'd, explain In tender words the anguish of her Pain! Nature forbids the very attempt; nor may She try to speak, what she so fain wou'd say. Yet what she can she does endeavour still, She's only from the Act debarr'd, not Will. By chance the Touth from his Companions stray'd, Cry'd out, Who's here? who's here the Answer's Amaz'd he cafts his wandring Eyes around, (made. Come hear, fays he, Come hear the Woods resound: He looks about again, and finding none Approach, Why do ye thus my person soun, ich;

Deer,

:

e

it; ight,

ed. Thich

K . 3

Say

134 METAMORPHOSIS.

Says he? and straight so many words again

He does receive for those he spoke in vain.

Though oft deceiv'd, yet still he cries, Let's meet;

The willing Nymph does straight the words repeat.

Pleas'd with the Voice, and ravish'd with his

Charms,

She strives to grasp the Lov'd one in her Arms, But all in vain; he nimbly quits the place. And forces off her hands from the Embrace. Despis'd, she ever since remains in Caves. Or hides her blushing Cheeks among the Leaves. Her Love increases, and no limit knows: The more she grieves, the stronger still it grows. Eternal Cares perplex her troubled mind; She can no Cure, nor no Diversion find Her Flesh consumes, and moulders with Despair, And all her Body's Juice is turn'd to Air; (So wondrous are th' Effects of easeless pain) That nothing but her Voice and Bones remain. Nay ev'n the very Bones at last are gone, And Metamorphos'd to a thoughtless Stone.

Y

T

T

T

H

H

T

W

So

A

T

W

T

W

W

N

E

W

So

A

Yet still the Voice does in the Woods survive: The Form's departed, but the Sound's alive. Thus her, and other Nymphs that him pursu'd. The wanton Youth delighted to delude. His outward form betray'd em first, and then He left 'em, as before he ferv'd the Men. Till at the last some injur'd Youth or Maid With hands lift up to Heav'n devoutly pray'd. So let him Love, but ne'er his Love enjoy; (Boy. And Nemelis confirm'd the Pray'rs that curs'd the There was, by chance, a living Fountain near, Whose unpolluted Channel ran so clear, That ev'n'twas liquid Silver you wou'd think, Where never Shepherds, northeir Flocks did drink; Which never Bird, nor any stragling Beast, Nor Branches falling from the Trees moleft, Encompass'd with a Verdant Plot of Grass, Which by the Neighb'ring Moisture nourish'd was. So neatly close the friendly Trees were fet, As left no room for Sol's intruding heat.

Yet

eat.

his

,

Ş.

WS.

ir,

Thicher

136 METAMORPHOSIS.

Thither the Youth fatigu'd with sport and toil Retreated to refresh himself a-while, Pleas'd with the beauty of the Spring and Soil. When to the Stream to quench his Thirst he goes, Another, and a fiercer Thirst arose. For whilft he drinks, ev'n in the very Draught, He's with his own reflected Beauty caught. He loves an Image, which no Body had; And what he thinks a Substance, is a Shade. Amaz'd he looks, till all his Sense is gone, Fix'd like a Statue made of Parian Stone. He views his Eyes, which like twin Stars appear, Hands worthy Bacchus, and Apollo Hair. His Youthful Cheeks, his Snowy Neck, each Grace That shines thro' the mixt beauty of his Face : He admires All, for which he is admir'd; Defires himself, and is himself defir'd; Wishes, Approves, and is himself Approv'd; Himself he vainly Loves, and is Belov'd. Ofr wou'd he the Fallacious Image kifs, And strive the flying Phantome to embrace;

As

No

He

Has

Tho

Inc

· VA

'T

T

'Is

"T

·W

But

Cor

He

And

Rai

He

'Te

'Of

Yo

As if what has no Being cou'd be caught; Not sensible that 'twas himself he sought. He knows not what he fees, yet what is feen, Has the true Cause of all his Passion been: Those very Eves that first deceiv'd him, still Increase the Error, and foment the Ill. 'Vain Touth, why do you, what avoids you, Love? 'That Form's destroy'd, if you but hence remove. 'The watry Beauty which you doat upon, 'Is but the Repercussion of your own. "Thas no Existence in it felf, but you; 'With you it comes, if you depart, 'twill go. But no regard to Quiet, or to Food, Cou'd tempt the Boy from the destructive Wood. He lies extended on the shady Grass, And views with greedy Eyes th' imagin'd Face. Raifing his Body gently by degrees, He stretch'd his Hands to the surrounding Trees. 'Tell me, ye Woods, for you have often been, 'Of undiscover'd Love the conscious Scene; You furely know: fay, Did you ever fee A Wretch, that lov'd prepost'rously like me?

ce

- 'I'm charm'd and pleas'd with what I fee; and that
- 'Which Charms and Pleases, do's my Grief create.
- 'For ev'n the thing I fee, I cannot find;
- 'Such Error do's misguide a Lover's mind.
- Besides, it strangely aggravates my pain,
- 'That neither Seas nor Hills my Wish restrain,
- Nor Roads that need be difficultly past,
- 'Nor fenced Cities with strong Walls embrac'd;
- A little Drop of Water does remove,
- 'And keep me from the Object of my Love.
- ' Ev'n he himself desires to be caught;
- ' For when my Lips are to the Surface brought,
- 'He strives to meet them from the tother side;
- 'So small a distance do's our Loves divide!
- 'Who e're thou art, that do'st my Eyes deceive,
- 'Come forth, and thy inchanted Mansion leave.
- 'Where do you fly? Sure, nor my Age, nor Form
- 'Can give distaste, for they the Nymphs cou'd charm.
- 'You feem to promise favour to your Friend;
  - 'And when I stretch my Hand, you yours extend.

6 1

'I

11:

١

· E

67

· A

' T

T

W

You Smile to fee me Smile; and when I Weep,

'Your very Tears with mine do measure keep.

'And by the motion of your Lips, I guess

'You fain would fomething to my Ears express.

'-I now perceive, I'm what I have pursu'd,

'Nor do's my Image longer me delude.

'My Love do's vainly on my felf return,

' And fans the cruel Flames with which I burn.

'The thing desir'd, I still about me bore,

'And too much Plenty has confirm'd me Poor.

'Oh! that I from my much Lov'd-felf cou'd go!

"Tis a strange Wish, yet wou'd to God 'twere so!

'My Grief confumes my Strength, and I perceive

'I've but a very little time to live.

'Nor shall of my untimly Fate complain,

'If with my Bodies Death I end my pain.

'But fain I wou'd, that he I love, might live

'To better times, and fairer Fates survive,

'And not conclued by my Fortunes, fall

'Two Lovers in one Death and Funeral.

This faid, he madly feeks th' enchant'd place,

Where first he saw the fair deluding Face;

And

rm cou'd

e, hat

e.

tend.

You

And with his Tears the Liquid Waters mov'd,
Which blur'd the Image he so vainly lov'd:
Perplex'd the more, perceiving him depart,
'O! do not rudely thus your Friend desert.
'Oh! stay, says he, it will afford some ease,
'To see what I'm forbidden to embrace.
Transported with his Rage, his Cloaths he rends,
And beats his naked Bosom with his Hands;
A livid blewness follow'd every Blow,
Whence blushing Streams of reeking Blood did flow.

Just like those Apples where the White and Red In equal parts around the Fruit is spread; Or such as in the Purple Grape is seen, Not yet maturely Ripe, nor wholly Green. Which when he in the Liquid Mirror spi'd, Unable his prevailing Grief to hide: Dissolv'd beneath the weight of his desires; He faints, and in the hidden Flames expires; As Wax before the Fire do's melt and run, Or Morning Frosts before the Rising-Sun.

No

1

7

A

A

V

SI

A

0

Fa

Fa

De

W

Th

Ye

An

An

Th

Joi

No Vigour, Srength, or Beauty do's remain: The Charms are vanish'd that adorn'd the Swain Which Eccho lov'd, for which the fighs in vain. Tho Angry, yet the Nymph cou'd not forbear To mourn his Fate, and grace it with a Tear. Ah, miserable Youth, she often cry'd! (pli'd! Ah, miserable Youth, the Nymph's last words re-When with his Hands he did his Shoulders wound. She still took care to Eccho back the found. At last, as in the Spring his Face he spy'd, O! Boy belov'd by me in vain, he cri'd; Farewell, O lovely Boy, belov'd in vain! Farewell, the Place and Eccho cri'd again. Deceas'd upon the tender Grass he lies, Whilft fullen Death clos'd up those charming Eyes, That us'd to view their Master with suprize. Yet after Death his Madness do's remain, And in Infernal Lakes he views himself in vain. The Naides their Brother's Fate lament, And mourn with Shaven-heads and Garments rent. The Dryades bewail; and Eccho too Joins in the doleful Confort of their Woe.

id

No

A Bier,

A Bier, a Pile, and Torches they prepare. But all in vain, they find no Body there: A Purple Flower is only to be found Compass'd with white and shining Leaves around. Soon as the News of these strange things were

The Prophet's Name through Grecian Cities roll'd. His Credit still increas'd where e're he came. And due Success enlarg'd his growing Fame. Pentheus alone his just Applause demi'de Pentheus, who durst both Gods and Men deride. Upbraids him with the blindness Juno wrought, And urges his Misfortunes for his fault. But the Old Man shaking his hoary Head ? How happy also wou'dst thou be, he faid, If thou like me, were't bleft with want of Eyes, And never see those Rites thou wilt despise. For if I don't mistake, the time draws near That Semeleian Bacchus will appear, Whom, if you fcorn to Honour and Adore, You shall, you Wretch, in thousand Parts be tore;

Ý

A

I

Y

P

C T

B

W

T

D

W

He

W

Pr

Ca

Suc

Th

No

Your fcatter'd Limbs shall strew the fatal Wood, And frain your Aunts and Mother with your Blood. It will be fo, your hapless Fate is such; You'll then complain that I have feen too much. Pentheus inrag'd with what he cou'd not bear, Commanded Silence, and no more wou'd hear: Th'event attested what the Prophet told, And Death ensuing did the whole unfold. Bacchus appears, and all the Fields around, With mingled Shouts of Men and Women found. The Nobles and Plebeians crowd along. Devoutly all to unknown Rites do throng. When Pentheus faw the Holy Cavalcade. He stretch'd himself, and thus he fiercely faid: What Madness do's Mavortian Off-spring thus Prompt on to Actions fo ridiculous? Can Sounding Brass, and Magick Frauds perswade Such Rage, as do's ev'n Reasons Throne invade: That those whom neither Warlike Sword or Spear. Nor Troops encountring Troops cou'd ftrike with

To

Your

re;

rere

d.

t,

s,

To Female Sounds, inspir'd with dang'rous Wine, Their Wit and Courage tamely must resign? Are you the mighty Men whom they report. Did hither from abandon'd Tyre refort? Who after many Toils and Dangers chose This Place for you, and your Dear Gods repose? And will you without fighting be fubdu'd, By an unarm'd Half-female Multitude? But you in whom both Strength and Courage joyn, Whose Years more nearly do resemble mine; A Sword your Hands, a Helmet fits your Heads Better than Leavy Crowns, and Spears of Reeds. Remember, I befeech you, whence you fprung; Affume his Courage, who whole Numbers stung To Death; fo high were his Referements grown, As to engage a Multitude alone. He dy'd in fighting for his Den and Springs; You fight for what Immortal Honour brings. He Hero's, and the Valiant did fubdue; They're only Women to be quell'd by you. But if the Gods forbid that Thebes shall stand, I'd have it ruin'd by some Warlike Hand.

Tho

T

T

T

Bu

W

WI

His

Acr

An

An

Wi

Haf

Go,

Rep

Enc. So h

Whe

F

ne,

7

n, ds

S.

g;

ıg

n,

Tho

Tho we should live to fee that fatal time. We may be Wretched, but without a Crime. 'Twill be fome Satisfaction in the Grave. T'have bravely loft what we cou'd never fave. But now, must Thebes be taken by a Boy, Who ne're did Arms, or Horse, or Sword employ! Whose painted Vestments and anointed Hair The Vertues of the Hot-brain'd Youth declare. Whom, if you'll but forbear, I will compel His fpurious Father, and feign'd Rites, to tell. Acrifius bravely the vain God defy'd. And his rude Enfrance into Grece deny'd: And shall a Stranger Pentheus afright. With all the Force of Thebes to back his Right? Hafte, hafte; fais be, my Laws brook no delay, Go, fetch their Drunken General away.

His Unkle and his Friends, his Words withfland, Reprove him, and in vain would hold his Hand;
Advice provokes his Passion, and the Rage
Encreases by their labour to asswage.
So have I known a Torrent gently glide,
When nothing do's obstruct the easy Tide;

E

But

But if great Stones are in the Passage thrown,
It swells the more, and violently pours down.
The bloody Messengers return, but bring
No Tidings of the God unto their King;
One of his Train by chance they straigling found,
And him, fay they, we've brought before you bound;
He from the Tyrrhen Shoar at first did stray,
Follow'd the God, and did his Rites obey.

No looner Pentheme did the Man discern,
But straight his Looks with Rage grew shercely stern;
He hardly cou'd the little time allow,
To be inform d of what he long'd to know.
Thou, who art doom'd a speedy Death to find,
And leave thy Learned Documents behind,
Says be, Come, quickly rell me whence you came,
Your own, your Parents, and your Countries Name!
What brought you from your Native Worship, o're;
To learn new Manners, and strange Gods adore!
He fearless said, Acases is my Name,
Maconia is the Country whence I came,
My Father cou'd no large Estate dispose,

No

I

7

D

T

Bu

To

H

T

TI

TI

TI

Th

An

BY

No Fields of rich and fertile Glebe befrow. Which sturdy Oxen shou'd Manure and Plows No Herds of Cartle, and no Flocks of Sheep, Whose Fleeces might themselves and Masters keep! He only knew how with his Line and Hook, To catch the wanton Fishes in the Brook. This was his whole Estate, no other Trade, Or to enrich himself or me, he had. Dying, faid be, 'These Waters, and this Art, Is all that I am able to impart. '[My Will cannot beyond my Pow'r advance;] This only I can call Inheritance. But foon difdaining to be here confin'd, To Navigation I apply'd my mind; How to Conduct a Ship, and how to note The watry Signs of the Olenian Goat, The show'ry Hyades, the Northern Bear, The Pleisder, and every other Star That might be useful to the Mariner. The feveral Points from whence the Winds do blow Andro my Cours des. What I And to what Ports Ships may fecurely go.

La

Advi Rote So h

d,

d:

ern:

1

all f

ne.

mé?

o're;

e? .

Who

No

VISCE A

By chance, as I the Isle of Delos made, By favourable Winds and Oars milled, I happily was cast on Chia's Land; 'Approach'd the Shore, and Anchor'd on the Sand. When Night was fpent, and first the morning Ray Blush'd, and gave notice of the Coming day; I role, and here fresh Water bid them bring, And show'd the way which led unto the Spring. Then from a rifing Ground I did diffry The prospect of the Weather and the Sky: Call'd my Companions from the diffant Shore, To work the Ship that they had Mann'd before. We're here, my Mate Opheltes cry'd, and brought A Prize which he had in the Defert caught; A youthful Boy with Beauty painted o're, He led in Triumph on the Captiv'd Shore, Reeling, o'recome with too much Wine and Sleep, Could hardly pace with him that led him, keep. I view'd his Port, his Gesture, and his Mien, And faid, that nothing Mortal there was feen: And to my Comrades, what I faw reveal'd, That fure fome God was in that Form conceald.

A Deity

7

F

E

In

T

Su

Sa

St

N

M

A

Bu

W

1 ay

13

- 0

10

H

p, ity

A Deity it is: 'Who e'er thou art, and it and 'Thy kind Affistance to our Toil impart; And pardon what these men have done amis. Tour Pray'r for us, fays Dictys, useless is. Dictys, than whom no nimble Tarr alive Cou'd fooner to the Topmost head arrive. Furl the Top-gallant fails, or right the Fane. And by a fingle Rope flide down again. Libys, Melanthus, and Alcimedon, Epopeus too, approv'd of what was done. In fhort, they all in one Defign were join'd, The Covetous hope of Prize had made 'em blind. Such Wickedness I never will endure, Said I, and fure I have fo much Right and Pow'r. Whilft I oppos'd their bringing him on board, Straight Lycabas affaults me with his Sword; Nor cou'd I from his Rage my felf defend, My Throat was wounded by his stronger Hand; And headlong in the Sea I had been cast, But that I feiz'd a Rope that held me fast. The Impious Crew approv'd the curfed Deed. Bacchus at last rais'd up his drowfy Head,

(As if the noise had wak'd him from his reft) And his right Senfes re-affum'd his Breft. What means this noise? How came I here, fays he? Whither do you defign to carry me? Fear not. favs Prorew, fet vour heart at eafe. Tell us what Port, we'll land you where you pleafe. Naxos, fays he, your Course to Naxos fleer. My House, my Riches, and Estate are there. I'll well reward you, if you grant my Boon; They fwear by all the Gods it shall be done; And fraight command to loofe the Sails with fpeed, And to the intended Port the Veffel guide. Naxos was on the Right, to th' Right T fleer. Opheltes crid, what bus hels have we there? Madman and Fool, where do you mean to go? Some nod unto the Left, some whitper, tmust be so. Amaz'd, faid I, let who will mount the Stern, And take the Helm, I'll not my felf concern. I'm blam'd by all ; when fraight Ethalion Supplies my Place; Tays he, In you alone

Our latery is repos'd. Without delay He claps the Helm a Weather, and bears away. Away he?

afe.

eed.

e fo.

way

Away he fouds afore the following Wind To Foreign Coasts, and Naxos left behind. The God flood fill, and faw the Fraud a-while, And cover'd his Resentments with a Smile. Whilst from the Deck he view'd the swelling Sea, With falfly counterfeited Tears, faid he, Are these the Shoars and Land you promis'd me? What is my Crime? what have I done amis, To merit fuch a Punishment as this? What Honour, or what Glory will it be To over-reach a simple Boy like me? The stubborn Crew do all my Tears despise, (Seas. And with their hafty Oars provoke the fluggifh Now by the God we bore, I swear to you, That nothing I relate but what is true. In middle Sea the Ship stood like a Rock, As fixt and moveless as twas in the Dock. Thick Ivy branches did their Oars confine, And round about the Sails and Tackling twine. The God with Grapes and racy Chaplets crown'd, Brandish'd a Spear with Vine-leaves circl'd round.

About

month of laters and to coroli wan o

152 METAMORPHOSIS.

About him Tigers and Fierce Panthers flood, And all the imagin'd Monsters of the Wood. The men amaz'd, use double Force and skill; Ply Oars and Sails, but yet the Ship stood still. (Whether 'twas Fear, or Madness, or Mistake, That did this wond'rous Transformation make.) The men leapt over-board, and Medon first With a black Shape and spreading Fins was curst. Ah! ah! faid Lycabas, what Tricks are thefe. Are you Curvetting in the briny Seas? When straight his Mouth was rurn'd into a Snowt, And his smooth Skin adorn'd with Scales about. Libys, endeavouring next to disengage The Oars from the Obstruction, felt the Rage Of Bacchin; Lo! when a new Change begins, His brawny Hands foon dwindle into Fins. Another while he strives to Hand the Sails, Straight finds his Body cover'd o'er with Scales; Loofes his Hands, and tumbles in the Seas, Whilst from his hinder parts a forked Tail does rife, With fuch a Figure as is often shown In the new Horns of the increasing Moon.

And

An

An

Th

An

Th

Wi

AR

Th

Fc.

· To Thi

And

Tha

Cri'

A

His

But

And Stra

F

1

And ever fince they take their Pastime there,
And sometimes to stheir Bodies in the Air;
Then nimbly dive again beneath, and snort,
And with wide Nostrils snuff the Waves in sport.
Thus among twenty Sailors there were none
Without a Change, besides my self alone.
Astonish'd with these Wonders, and dismay'd,
The God encourag'd me, and thus he said;
'Forget your Suff rings, and dismiss your Fear,
'To Dia now your Course directly steer.
Thither at last we safely were convey'd,
And ever since I have the God obey'd.

To your long Tale we've lent a patient Ear,
That Wrath might by delay grow less severe;
Cri'd angry Pentheus, 'Take away the Slave,
And send him down with Torture to the Grave.

Forthwith Acetus closely is confin'd,
His Hands and Legs with heavy Chains they bind.
But whilft they shew their Industry and Care,
And all the bloudy Instruments prepare,
Straight on its own accord the Prison-Door
Flew open, tho' twas Lock'd and Barr'd before;

Fore'd

ife,

ł.

wt,

And

Forc'd by the Vertue of Some unknown Charms, The broken Chains fell from his loaded Arms.

But Penthens still persists in his Design,
Nor sends, but goes himself to Rites Divine.
With haste and rage he's to Cycheron bound,
Where all the Fields with holy Shouts resound.
Just as a War-horse champs the soaming Bit,
When the Shrill Trumpets sound a Charge for Fight.

So Pentheus frets and foams, and storms and stares. Whilst the loud Sound strikes his offended Bars. His Mother first the daring Wretch espies, Beholding Sacred things with Prophane Eyes; Madly inspir'd, first wounds him with her Spear, And then cries out, Look here, my Sisters, here; Here's the wild Boar that has our Fields annoy'd, This Boar must now be by our hands destroy'd. They all fall on him, and their Rage renew; He trembling slies, but they too quick pursue. Urg'd by his Fears, to late Repentance brought, He sues for Pardon, and condemns his Fault.

A

0

Sh

H

By

No

Or

W

Ag

Do

W

An

Tul

As

Wi

Ad

Ma

Autonoe, he cries, cease now your Rage, O let Actaon's Ghoft your wrath affwage; She knows not who Attaon is, but tears His Right Arm off, i'th' midft of all his Prayers. By Ino straight of t'other he's bereft, Nor has he either Hands or Fingers left; Only a wounded Carcase does remain, Which to his Mother he presents in vain. Agave gladly feeing what was done. Does madly to difmembred Pentheus run. What's done is yours: This, this alone's our Deed, And from his bleeding Shoulders finote his Head. Just with such equal Violence and speed, As Leaves blown from the Tree, in Autumn fall, With fuch a Wind as shakes the Tree and all. Admonish'd by these Wonders, Theban Dames, Made Sacred Altars blaze with holy Flames.

t.

e for tares

S.

5 pear,

re; v'd,

d.

ght, t.

lutono

The

detende, he chias, ceafe now your fla

The FOURTH BOOK.

The Argument of the Fourth Book.

Alcithoe with ber Sifters contemn the Rites of Bacchus, and prophane bis Festival by sitting at Work; and to pass the time off, tell each her Story; Viz. The Tragical Loves of Pyramus and Thisbe, Leucothoe's Passion for the S Hermaphroditus and Salmacis. The foremention'd Sife afterwards transform'd into Birds; their Webs and Diff. into Vine-Leaves and Branches, Agave's Joy upon Misfortune of theirs, turn'd into Grief; Ino and Athan being feiz'd with a Frenzy that caus'd them to coff the Selves into the Sea, where they became Marine Deities. 1 Theban Matrons bewriling them as dead, are themfel chang'd into Fowler Cadmus also opprest with Grief this Disaster, leaves Thebes, and with his Wife takes Progress into Illyria, where they are both transform'd Snakes. Accrifius was now the only surviving Person. Those who treated Bacchus with Contempt. He was Gra father to Perfeuis, who had cut off the Gorgon's He After the Releasing of Andromeda, be transforms At into a Mountain. A Quarrel afterwards arifing at bis N tial Feaft, be changes Phineas and bis Party into Statues

ET rash Alcithoe still disavows
His Rites, nor Bacchus for Jove's Son allows
Her Sisters too, seduc'd by her Neglect, Afford the Sacred Orgyes no respect.

honourd N er Grecian im'd, omit twice-got adorn.

O.L.

fi the

Sift of the same

Tight of the sker

Had Ad No

ow

His

Fowls Dewston, Fowls Cadmy leaves Thebe fillyria, where crisus was nested Bacchus lens, subs leasing of sin. A Q changes

His Obl

Wh Wi Th

Th

The Afid

Salu No

Inve

Eter

In H Yet, The

And Ljon

Both

His Priest a Festival Proclaims, to be Observed by Dames, and Maids from labour free. When dreft in Skins of Beafts they must appear, Wild Ivy shading their dishevell'd Hair Their Right Hand brandifhing a Leafy Spear. Thus he commands, and Prophecies withal, oxie M Strange Dooms should those that flight the God Reels in Callear, with James of Wire offed The Matrons, and new-marri'd Wives obey; W Afide their half-foun Webs and Diftaffs lay of both And, while with od rous Gums the Altar flames, Salute the God by all his honourd Names. No Title they, which either Gresian Wit Invented, or his Merits claim'd, omit, Hail Son of Fire (they lung) twice got, twice born. Eternal Youth and Vigour thee adorn. In Heav'n unrival'd for each God-like Grace! Yet, when unborn'd, thou shewst a Virgin's face.) Thee Sun-burnt India her first Victor knew, and I And Eastern Ganges did thy Triumphs view. 1 Lycurgue, Pent bene, both alike prophane, bnA Both Victims, to thy just Revenge, were flain Which

Which, as it drengh'd the Earth with their vilaBlood Their Corps is harl'd into the Threhne Flood Fierce Panthers that did oute the Defert awe With tame submiffine Neeks thy Chariot draw. While Bachanals and Saryrs jolly Crews Make no the Cavalcade : Silenus too ... (Beth Who prope with's Staff, scarce fits his flow-paid Reels in the Rear, with fumes of Wine opprest. Whilft Youths and Metrons undiffinguish Cries And Musick's loader Confort rends the Skies On their new God, O come, some pleas'd, they call! Thus they perform his Sacred Festival.

The Meni'd's fill at home perverly flay, And with untimely Work prophage the days In diff rene Tasks employ'd, they Weave or Spin, And force their Handmaids to partake their Sin Let us, faid the who drew the finelt Thred, Hall (Whilst others idly so false Rices are led) Let us, by Palle rought much better skill, Proceed, till we our preful Task fulfil. And what may best our Pains and Time beguile; Lee each by turns, a Story tell the while. Which

The

Th

Ade She

Wh

She Th

Sup

AI

Ori

Tu

Or

Cha

Til

Ori

(W

Mol

She

All

Ne

W

lood.

9140

Whe

U.W.

The

Beaff

paed

A.

CS.

call

Salut

old

Inver

pio,

Sin

Hal

nd I

5nA

Jes I stite8

The

The reft confent; and as the counfell'd well Address'd the Bidest first her Tale to tell. She paus'd, to think, of many that occurr'd, Which Story wou'd the most delight afford : and and She doubted whether the thould first relate woodie The Babylonifb Nymph Derceris Fate; Suppos'd by them of Paleftine to take a loud 701 A Fishes Shape, and dwell within a Lake. 100 10 1 Or of the diff rent Change her Daughter felt. on A Turn'd to a Dove that on high Turrets dwelt. Or how the Nais's pow'rful Herbs and Song. 1 3 1 Chang'd liftning Youths into a Soaly throng; Till in their Pate the thar'd who did the wrong. Or of the Tree whose once white Berries grew (With Blood beforinkled) of a Crimfon Hue; Most pleas'd with This, because it was not stale, of She twirls her Spindle, and begins her Tale, out I Young Pyramus and Thisbe (who excell'd and al

Young Pyramus and Thisbe (who excelled and all Youths and Nymphs the riling-Sun beheld). If Neighb'ring Apartments had, in that fair Town.

Whose Reyal Foundress gave it was Renown:

To par que l'acre, when our Scale ampropul?

158

Which

Which, as it drench'd the Earth with their vile Blood,
Their Corps is hurl'd into the Threhne Flood.
Fierce Panthers that did once the Defert awe,
With tame submiffive Necks thy Chariot draw,
While Bachanals and Satyrs jolly Crew,
Make up thy Cavalcade; Silenus too, (Beast,
Who propt with's Staff, scarce sits his slow-pack
Reels in the Rear, with sumes of Wine oppress.
Whilst Youths and Matrons undistinguish Cries,
And Musick's louder Consort rends the Skies.
On their new God, O come, come pleas'd, they call:
Thus they perform his Sacred Festival.

The Meng'd's still at home perversly stay,
And with untimely Work prophane the day.
In diff'rent Tasks employ'd, they Weave or Spin,
And force their Handmaids to partake their Sin.
Let us, said she who drew the finest Thred,
(Whilst others idly to false Rites are led.)
Let us, by Palles raught much better skill,
Proceed, till we our useful Task sulfil.
And what may best our Pains and Time beguile;
Let each by turns, a Story tell the while.

The

Th

Ad

She

She

Sup A 1

Or

Or i

Till Or o

(W

Mod

All

Ne

Wh

lood.

Beaft

pacid

ft.

es,

call!

pin,

Sin.

les

The

The rest consent; and as the counsell'd well. Address'd the Eldest first her Tale to tell. She paus'd, to think, of many that occurr'd, Which Story wou'd the most delight afford: She doubted whether the should first relate The Babylonish Nymph Dercetis Fate; Suppos'd by them of Palestine to take A Fishes Shape, and dwell within a Lake. Or of the diff rent Change her Daughter felt. Turn'd to a Dove that on high Turrets dwelt. Or how the Nais's pow'rful Herbs and Song Chang'd liftning Youths into a Scaly throng; Till in their Fate she shar'd who did the wrong. Or of the Tree whose once white Berries grew (With Blood besprinkled) of a Crimson Hue; Most pleas'd with This, because it was not stale, She twirls her Spindle, and begins her Tale.

Young Pyramus and Thisbe (who excell'd All Youths and Nymphs the rifing-Sun beheld) Neighb'ring Apartments had, in that fair Town,
Whose Royal Foundress gave it vast Renown:

Close

Close Neighbourhood Acquaintance early bred, Acquaintance Love, whose Torch in time had led
The longing Lovers to the Nuptial Bed.
But churlish Parents (tho' with fruitless Pains, Since wedded were their Hearts) forbad the Banes.
She lov'd like Pyramus, like Thinbe he,
For both selt Passion to the last degree.
Yet each had learnt that Passion to disguise,
And in the presence of their warchful Spies,
To correspond by Signs and speaking Eyes.
The Lovers thus did silently Converse, (sierce.
But found, when most suppress'd, their Flames most Quite thro' the Wall that parted them was left (By the green Cement's shrinking) a small Cleft. This stender Breach (as Love is Eagle-ey'd)

For Ages unobserv'd, the Lovers spy'd.
Thro' this, by Whispers, fafely they convey
In mutual Courtships, all that Love wou'd fay.
Fix'd to the Walls each side, with eager hast,
Ainbrosia in each other's Breath they tast.
And said, Why envious Marble so unkind,
To part our Bodies, when our Souls are joyn'd?

It

1

A

0

A

N

0

In

A

Su

W

TH

W

Bu

An

But

Ap

W

(It' led ( nes.

erce.

molt

eft

eft.

1?

It

It were but just that thou shou'dst quit thy Place,
And suffer wishing Lovers to embrace:
Or, if unworthy of so great a Bliss,
At least permit us to exchange a Kiss!
Nor shall we prove ingrateful, who confess
Our selves thy Debtors for this happiness;
In am'rous Conference to pass the Day,
And to each others Ear our Sighs convey.
Such fond Complaints all day the Lovers sent,
Nor bid farewel till half the Night was spent;
Warm kisses then to the cold Stone appli'd,
That were to reach each others Lips deni'd.

Impatient for the next Day's Sun they staid,
When scarce they had the kind good morrow said,
But both resolv'd their Keepers to deceive,
And in the Dead of Night the City leave.
But, least they should too far asunder roam,
Appoint their Meeting-place at Ninus Tomb.
Where a tall Mulb'ry Tree her Branches spread,
(It's Berries then were white) by Fountains sed.
This was to both their likings so contriv'd,
They thought each Hour an Age till Night arriv'd.

M First.

First, Thinke, by the help of a Disguise,
Steals forth, and undiscover'd by her Spies,
To Ninus Monument by Moon-shine Flies.
And there beneath th' appointed Tree's cold Shade
Sat fearless down, by Love couragious made.
When lo! a Lioness with Blood besmear'd,
Approaching to the well-known Spring appear'd.
Thinke at distance did her Danger view,
And to a neighb'ring Cave in fright withdrew:
But slying dropt her Mantle on the ground,
Which (having slack'd her Thirst) the Salvage found;

She mouth'd it first with Jaws distain'd in Gore, And then with disappointed Fury tore.

When Pyramu, who later was releast,
Beheld the Track of some enormous Beast,
His Looks turn'd Pale, but when the Veil he spi'd
Blood-stain'd and Torn, with Horror seiz'd, he cri'd,
One luckless Night shall give two Lovers Death,
Both young,—but worthy One of longer Breath.
The Guilt was mine, who thee, lamented Maid,
T'encounter Midnight Dangers did perswade,

And

Ar

To

Ru

W

TH

Th

En

Fre

Th

An

Fro

His

Cha

Thi

Fro

(Le

Ret

In h

The

But

1 le

d.

age

'd i'd,

th.

h.

1,

And

And came not first .- Return thou Mountain-Beaft, To tear this Flesh, and on my Entrails feast. But Cowards wait for Death to end their Woe. Which Men of Courage on themselves bestow. Then to th' appointed Place the Robe he bears. There kis'd it oft, and drench'd it with his Tears. Enrich'd, faid he, with Thinbe's guiltles Blood, From me her Murd'rer take a fecond Flood; Then drew his Sword to give the fatal Wound. And backwards fell extended on the Ground From his full Veins, diffected with the ftroak. (As when fome o'er charg'd Water-pipe is broke) His frarting Blood forang up, and foouting high. Chang'd the white Bertieston Crimfon dye: W This forinkling chang'd their Colour, fince suppli'd From the Tree's Root that drank the Purple ride.

The Nymph who could not yet her Fears allay, (Left she too long shou'd make her Lover stay)
Returns to seek him, restless till she tell
In his dear Arms, the Danger that besel.
The Place and Tree by certain Signs she knew,
But wonder'd at the Berries alter'd hue again.

M 2

She

She doubts her Senses, till with worse surprize,

Blood recking Earth, and quiv'ring Limbs she spies;

Then starts, turns pale, and trembles like a Tide. When gentle Breezes ov'r the Surface glide; But when a fecond View confirm'd her Fear, That twas her Pyramus lay weltring there. She beat her Breaft, and tore her lovely Hair; Then kneeling down, embrac'd Him in her Arms, Now fenfless grown of her endearing Charms: To drench his Wound, the weeps a Briny-flood, With Tears recruiting his exhaufted Blood. She kis'd his Lips, and when she found 'em cold, No longer could from wild Complaints with-hold What strange mischance, what envious Destiny Divocces my dear Pyramus and me! Thy Thisbe calls, - O Pyramus reply! -Can Pyramus be deaf to Thibe's cry?

When Thisbe's Name the dying Lover heard, His half-clos'd Eyes for one last Look he rear'd; Which having snatch'd the blessing of that Sight, Resign'd themselves to everlasting Night.

And

Her

And

Tw

For

Perf

Or.

My

'Tis

In t

To

Nor

B

Tol

Of e

Pern

Nor

And

With

The

de.

ms.

mA

d,

(As

ld.

old.

ny

097 rd,

d;

hr,

And

And now the Nymph, with Horror looking round,

Her stain'd Veil, and his empty Scabbard found,
And thus exclaim'd.—I find, alas, too late!

Twas thy own Hand and Love procur'd thy Fate.

For thee, why should not this weak Arm of mine
Perform as much, whose Passion equal'd thine?

Or, if my feeble Sex such strength deny,
My Love shall Force and Courage too supply.

Tis just I should thy kind Companion be,
In that untimely Fate I brought on thee.

To part thee from me, Death had Pow'r alone,
Nor shall Death part,—no; Death shall make us
One!

But you, our cruel Parents, who deny'd
To lay us, living, by each Other's fide:

O! fince our Wishes and your Fears are fled,
Of ever meeting in the Nuptial Bed,
Permit at least the last Request we crave,
Nor envy us the comfort of One Grave!
And thou, O Tree, who shad'st one Lover dead,
With Boughs that shall another soon o'er-spread;

M 3

Of

Of chearful Colour bear no longer Fruit, But fuch as Love's fad Funeral may fuit.

She faid, and to her Breaft the Sword apply'd,
While reeking from her bleeding Lover's fide.
Her Wifhes, which till then had fu'd in vain
Her Parents, or the Gods Confent to gain,
In her laft Moments did with Both obtain.
The ripening Berries are in Mourning dreft,
And in one peaceful Urn the Lovers Affres reft.

This mournful Story to a period brought,
And a short Interval allow'd to Thought;
Leneathor did a new Diversion give,
By a more Comick fort of Narrative;
Round whom, while thus she did the Tale relate,
Silentia's Mutes her listning Sisters sate.

This very Sun, whose influencing Light,
Do's cherish Nature, as it chears our Sight;
Has by experience Love's fierce Passion known,
And felt a Flame that did exceed his own.
Since then the business falls to me in course,
I'll entertaid you with the Sun's Amours.

Vill Bought that thall another found of the

This

Fi

W

G

A

A

V

W

W

Bu

A

W

H

O

T

So

T

This God, 'tis faid, for nothing 'scapes his sight,
First saw Love's Goddess in her stol'n delight;
While Mars, unarm'd, storm'd absent Vulcan's Bed,
And in requital fortified his Head.
Griev'd at the Sight, he hunts all Heav'n about,
And finds at last the limping Cuckold out.
Shews his Wife's falshood, and his vile disgrace,
And tells him too the very time and place.
Vex'd at the Shame he never cou'd recal,
Jove's Blacksmith let his Tools and Courage fall.
With strange concern at this Affront posses,
Which if unknown had ne're disturb'd his rest:
But soon the presence of his Mind returns,
And more with Rage, than his own Forge he burns.

He summons strait the Cyclops to his aid,
And thin Brass-plates on shining Anvils laid;
Where fairly drawn, by curious Artand Pains,
He works them first to Links, and then to Chains;
Of these such subtil Nets and Traps he made,
That shew'd him perfect Master of his Trade;
So small they were, they did deceive the Sight,
Tho when the Sun-beams lent it all their Light.

M 4

Arachne's

This

ate,

n,

d,

Arachne's Net, when spread to take her Prey, Are not to thin, fo finely drawn as they. The Work thus fram'd, was fitted to the Bed, And undiscover'd neatly over-spread; Hither th' adultrous God and Goddels came, To quench and to revive Loves pleasing Flame. But by this new Machine for them prepar'd, Were in the very Act of Love infnar'd. Vainly o're joy'd, thus to detect the Crime. Whose bare Suspicion had distracted him, Vulcan the Ivory-folding Doors unbar'd; And to Tove's Court, lame as he was, repair'd. Thence call'd the Gods to witness his disgrace, And view the fetter'd Lovers close embrace, Which made some long, and wish for Mars's place.

But Venue, at whose cost their Sport was made, With sharp Revenge, the loath'd Discov'rer paid. (For Females rarely so forgiving prove, To pardon the Obstructers of their Love)

The wrong of injur'd Love she did resent,
And made his Crime become his Punishment.

What

Or Sinc

Thy By t

And

Sinc

Ogle

Ato

And

Som

And

Nor But

To

To

What now avail the Beauties of thy Face, Or Thining Rays that thy fmooth Temples grace? Since thou whose beams Earth's moisture do exhale, And parch with too much warmth the dufty Ball. Thy felf art fcorch'd, and ready to expire By the strange heat of a more raging Fire. And only in one Object doft delight, That shou'dst on All employ thy watchful Sight. Since those bright Eyes which all the World shou'd Ogle Leucothoe, and are fix'd on her. Sometimes thy halty Beams too early shine, At other times, as much too late decline. And while thou ftandst to gaze on her Delights, This stay prolongs the tedious Winter Nights. Sometimes thou fail'it, and in thy Face we find The same defect that has diffurb'd thy Mind; And whilft this dark Eclypse obscures thy Light, Aftonish'd Mortals tremble at the fight. Nor does the interpoling Moon prevail, But pow'rful Love, to make thee look fo pale. To her alone thy whole Address was made, To her thy Vows, to her thy Homage paid.

7hat

e.

d.

Nor Clymene, nor Rhodos now did please;
Nor Circe's Mother, far transcending these,
Cou'd e'er with-hold thee from Lencothoe's Arms,
Though her's were stronger than her Daughter's Charms.

Nor Clytie, who though griev'd at thy distain,
Lov'd thee too well, since still She lov'd in vain.
Leucothoe alone employ'd thy thought,
All other Loves were slighted or forgot.
This Daughter of Eurynome the Sage,
The Celebrated Beauty of her Age;
Who, ripen'd, did excel her Mother more
Than she outvy'd her yielding Sex before;
The Vogue of Achamenian Towns obtain'd,
Where Orchamm, her Royal Father, raign'd.
Within the Confines of the Eastern Sky,
The Pastures, kept for Phabm Horses, lie.

Where on the Flowers of an Ambrosian Mead,
Instead of Grass, the Aiery Coursers feed.
And with the Banquets of that fat'ning Soil,
Recruit at night against next morning's toil.

While

de ber war ve vad al

W

Ar

TI

Wi

En

As

W

All

Str

But

Th

Iha

Th

An

Iar

And

I al

Tha

But

I fe

His Did

bo A ns,

ter's

in.

106

While

While there at ease on heav'nly Cates they fed, And Phabe now reign'd in her Brother's flead. The God difguis'd, like old Eurynome, With reverend Looks, and awful Gravity, Enter'd the Chamber, where his Mistress sate, As hard at work, as if the foun for Fate: Where in a crowd of learning Maids she wrought, All by her Art, and her Example taught. Straight Phabus kis'd her in his Masquerade. But more than a Parental Love betray'd. Then cry'd, difmis your Servants hence, my Dear, Ihave a Secret, none but you must hear. The Maids, withdrawn, he reckons her his own, And makes his Person, and his Bus'ness known. I am the God that measures out the Year, And make each Seafon its due product bear. I all the World furvey, and 'tis by me, That all the World does its fair Objects fee. But in the spacious Compass of my view I fee no Beauty to compare with you. His words, intended to obtain her Love, Did an amazing dread and horror move. boA Nor Nor cou'd she now her Joints and Work command,
It fell neglected from her feeble Hand.
Yet in this fright she did such Charms express,
That made his Passion with her Fear encrease.
And now the God impatient of delays,
Appears himself, and does resume his Rays.
While, tho astonish'd at the sudden Light,
The Virgin soon was dazled with the Sight;
And freely passive did his force sustain,
Nor thought she had occasion to complain:
So eas'ly Courting Gods, their Suit obtain.

But Clytic envious that another's Charms
Shou'd force her Lover from her slighted Arms;
Divulg'd to Orchamus his Daughter's Shame,
Glad of the means to blacken thus her Fame.
The angry Parent, (whose inhumane Rage
Not all her soft Intreaties cou'd asswage;
While to the Author of her Grief, she pray'd,
With hands extended towards his Beams, for aid;)
As if he might destroy that gave her birth,
Interr'd her living Body in the Earth.

And

Aid ag anne Condress and

A

W

T

T

Bu

H

No

Sir

By

To

An

No

He

Wi

Th

The

Her

Did

And

Tha

And

id,

Aste

The

siW

(ah

1:)

And

Tho

And on it rais'd a Tomb of heavy Sand, (Stand. Whose pond'rous weight her rising might with-This Phabus foon disperst, and made her way To free her Head from the impris'ning Clay. But, oh, in vain! fhe cou'd not raife her Head, His Mistress, dearer than his Life, was dead. Nor did fo fad an Object grieve his Eye. Since Phaëton fell headlong from the Sky. By the warm influence of his Beams he try'd To raise her Spirits, but the Fates deni'd. And fince he found the great Attempt was vain. Nor cou'd prevail to call her back again; He mourn'd her loss, and sprinkled all her Hearle With Balmy Nectar, and more precious Tears. Then faid, Since Fate does here our Joy defer, Thou shalt ascend to Heav'n, and bless me there: Her Body straight imbalm'd with Heav'nly Art, Did a fweet Odor to the Ground impart. And from the Grave a fecond Tree arife, That cheers the God with pleasing Sacrifice. Still mourning Phabus does her loss deplore, And to fcorn'd Clytie pays no Vifits more.

Tho too much Love might for her forrow plead And that excuse the sad discovery made. He hates her Person, and he shuns her Bed. While the confumes, impatient of the Slight. Shuns all the Nymohs, and banishes delight. The Ground all day her Sear, her Bed all night. Here lies expos'd to the unwholfome Air. Whose Fogs hang thick on her neglected Hair. Thus did the languish nine fucceffive days, at we And nor her Hunger, nor her Thirst allays. No kind support of Nature does receive. But whatthe Dew, or her own Tears did give. Nor leaves the Earth, but waits her Lover's rife; And still attends his motion with her Eyes. Her Limbs at last were rooted to the Ground, And where she languish'd, a new Being found: Her paler Parts in bloodless Leaves arose; The ruddier a purple Flower disclose. Which tho by Roots confin'd to keep its place. Still towards its dearest Object turns its face. And while the from her felf is thus eftrang'd, She finds her Shape, but not her Passion chang'd.

She

Wi

ATI

Rut

Luc

Wh

N

Of Tra

Wit

Nor

Cha

How

Croc

As A

And

H

Of I

Tha

And

Is w

ToF

de nio

v#

Asse

SVI

fe,

Wit

18

d:

sid

2'd.

She

She said—her Story was by All receiv'd

With Wonder, but the Fact by Few believ'd

All own true Gods with boundless Pow'r endu'd,

But Bacebus from that Number they exclude.

Lucot boe's next requir'd her Turn to take,

Who safter pli'd her Work, while thus she spake.

No threadbare Tale (faid fhe) will I recite Of Daphnis by his jealous Mistres's Spice Transform'd to Stone, nor will your patience veri With stale Records of Seython's envy'd Sex : Nor Celmus (once the Object of his Love) Chang'd fince to Adamant by angry Jove. A How Corphants forang up from halty showrs. Crocus and Smilas languish'd into Flow'rs As Antiquated Legends I forbear, And tell what will furprize and charm your Ear. How Salmacis (a harmless Spring before) Of late contracted the malignant Pow'r, That with a touch can manly Arength rebate, And render brawny Limbs efferminate, Is worth your hearing; fince the Cause is known To Few, though all the strange Effect must own.

The

The Naids nurft a Boy in Ida's shade. Whom Mercury by Beauties Goddess had . Hermaphroditus: in whose charming Face His Parents mingled Features you might trace. Three Lustres past in Ida's known Retreats. Abroad he goes to visit Foreign Seats; To find new Groves and Streams; nor felt his Toil With change of Prospects pleas'd in ev'ry Soil. He travell'd Lycia, till a Spring he found In Carian Fields, transparent to the Ground. Its Banks with Flow'rs instead of Rushes crown'd. A Nymph inhabited this Chrystal Lake. Who no Diversion cou'd in Hunting take: Nor pass'd the Confines of the Neighb'ring Plain, A Stranger to Diana, and her Train. Oft did her Sifters chide her Sloth, and faid, For shame, O Salmacis, unactive Maid, For shame thy Jav'ling take, or Quiver seize, And mingle noble Exercise with Ease. Nor Quiver, Bow, or Javelin wou'd she seize, Nor quit for Toils of Exercise, her Ease.

Bu

He

Or

An

Ma

Oft

Wh

No

But She's

And

Ther

She t

Say v

For n

And a

Dr if

Happ

Jappy Jappy

But fometimes in her own fair Fountain laves Her fairer Limbs, and ruffles it to Waves : Or curls her Treffes on its flowry Side. And for a Glass consults the Chrystal Tide. Naked or drefs'd, as by her Fancy led. Makes wither'd Leaves or foringing Grafs her Bed. Oft gathers Flowers; and this was her Employ When the discover'd first the lovely Boy: Nor had she one short minute view'd his Charms But in that minute wish'd him in her Arms. She's eager to accost him, yet delays, And to adjust her Looks and Drefs, the stays: Then, farisfi'd that both became her well, She thus accosts him, — Lovely Stranger tell, Say what thou art; if Mortal or Divine. For never have I feen a Form like Thine. If thou belong'ft to bleft Abodes above, And art a God, it's fure the God of Love. Drif Mortality fuch Charms can wear, Happy the Parents of a Birth fo fair! lappy the Sifter of fuch matchless Charms, dappy the Nurse who rear'd Thee in her Arms;

But

Toil, n'd.

lain.

.

But

But bleft unfpeakably bove all befide Is the whom Thou vouchfaf'ft to be thy Bride. If fuch a Nymph there be, I'll not repine, So thou'lt admit me for thy Concubine. Thou'lt find me (if no more thou haft to give) Contented on poor stoln Delights to live. But if (as I do hope) Thou art Unwed, O take and bless me with thy Nuptial Bed. She ceas'd a rifing Blush his Face o'erspread, (Who knew not Love) but with a brighter Red Than Summer Apples on the Sunny fide, Or polish'd Ivory in Crimson di'd; So Phabe's Afpect, in Eclipse, is found, While Cymbals to relieve her vainly found. The Nymph entreats (if he no more will give) Such Kiffes as a Sifter may receive. But now with herce Delires impatient grown, As round his Iv'ry Neck her Arms are thrown; Hence wanton Nymph, fland off, he cri'd, or I From Thee and these pollured Seats must sy. She (feiz'd with fear) cries, Stranger, I'll be gone, And leave you to enjoy this Place alone:

Then

T

Y

Sh

W

H

A

Hi

Ti

T

TI

Hi

Th

Le

Fre

Ra

An

Th

Cla

Th

Re

As

Then with diffembled Steps, afide fhe goes, Yet with each Step a backward Look fhe thrwosi She sculks behind a Thicker for Pretence, Where crawling on her Knees the eyes him thence: He fancies now the Place to him left free. And revels in imagin'd Liberty: His wanton Circuits in the Meads he took, Till he discover'd the enticing Brook. There dips his Ankles first, and having tri'd The Water's Temper, lays his Robes aside. His naked Beauties struck with new Defire The Prying Salmacis, whose Eyes shot Fire. Less scorching Glances, and less frequent pass From Phabus Beams reflected by a Glass. Rack'd with Delay, she scarce her Joys refrains, And scarce from the wish'd Embrace abstains. The Boy, as shiv'ring on the Bank he stood, Clapt his white Sides, and leapt into the Flood. Then with his lab'ring Arms his Body rows, Reflecting fuch a whiteness where He goes, As Lillies which in Christal we enclose.

Then

gone,

d

(s

;

t

The

The Day's my own, aloud the Naiad cri'd;
And naked flung her felf into the Tide.
There feiz'd her Prey, that strugled to divorce
Himself in vain, and kisses him by force.
Him weari'd, now she does at will command,
And to his Breast applies her bolder Hand.
She rowls him where she pleases, sink or swim,
Nor can he disengage one strugling Limb.
So fares the Eagle with a Serpent twin'd,
So fares an Oak with wreathing Ivy join'd;
And so the Polypus's fetter'd Prey
Lashes the Waves, but cannot break away.

The Nymph thus feiz'd the still resisting Boy,
And though she cannot her Desire enjoy,
Embraces him more close, the more He's Coy.
Cross Fool, said she, thou striv'st in vain, for know
These folding Arms shall never let Thee go.
Ye pow'rful Gods to my Request agree;
Let Time that Day or Minute never see,
That me from Him shall part, or Him from me.
Her Wish succeeds; their mingled Bodies take One Figure, and of Two one Person make.

Young

Y

By

Bu

C

Ye

As

Th

W

0

(In

Let

De

Wi

Th

An

As

Pro

Wh

Har

Young Cyons thus, of different Kinds, we see
By skilful Grafting knit into a Tree.
But this Compounded Pair you neither can Call Male or Female, perfect Maid or Man;
Yet 'twixt 'em such a Person is compil'd,
As may, though neither, yet be either, stil'd.

Harmaphrodieus, who so dearly tri'd
The Sex transforming Vertue of the Tide;
With Voice (grown shrill) thus to his Parents cri'd.
O hear me Both, as both your Names I bear,
(In token that to Both I once was Dear)
Let ev'ry man that in this Fountain laves,
Depart half-Male, half Female, from these Waves
With his Disaster griev'd, Both Parents grant
The Wishes of their double Supplicant; (Force,
And bid the Streams, that chang'd him, keep their
As long as Time and They should hold their Course.

She said — their Tasks the busy Sisters ply, Prophane his Feast, and still the God defy. When lo (e'er yet discover'd by their Eyes) Harsh-sounding Instruments their Ears surprize.

OW

ing

N 3

While

While Myrrhe and Saffron fragrant Odours shed
And (what is scarcely to be credited)
Their Looms with verdant Ivy are o'erspread.
The Wool turns Leaves, the Threads of Courser Twine

Prove Branches, curling Tendrels the more fine. The Season now was come, whose dusky Light Is neither, yet partakes of Day and Night. The Fabrick shakes, the Rooms seem all on fire, (While Lamps and Torches with the Flames conspire) And fill'd (the Scene's Amazement to encrease) With dreadful Forms of howling Salvages. The frighted Sifters mount, and skulk aloof In fundry Corners of the Winding Roof; But in their Flight transform'd, for Arms they find Contracted Pinnions to their Shoulders join'd. Yet of the Knowledge how this Change arriv'd By Darkness, and their blinder Fears depriv'd With unplum'd Wings they narrow Circuits take, And feeble Cries with little Organs make; (Shame, Haunt Towns, not Groves; and conscious of their By Twilight fly, and thence derive their Name.

Bacchus

T

F

A

SI

B

H

T

N

H

V Is

1

S

h

There

Bacchus, by these Events, in Thebes was grown
The God ador'd by all the fearful Town;
Fair Ino in her Nephew's praise delights,
And ev'ry where his mighty Deeds recites.
She only of the Sisters free from Woes,
But what she by her Suffering Sisters knows.

Her Juno fees, of her fair Offspring proud, Her Royal Husband, and her foster God. And to her felf thus talks incens'd; Shall He Turn a Ship's Crew o'reboard at once to Sea? That Whore-son make a Mother's hands severe, Madly her Darlings bleeding Entrails tear? He into Batts old Minyas Daughters turn, While I affronted still in silence mourn? Is all my Power reduc'd to childish Tears? That Baftard Boy more nobly bold appears: He, in the murther of Agave's Son Shew'd what might be by Godlike fury done: My Enemy I'll bravely imitate, (Fate. And make proud Ino meet her wretched Sifter's Between thick baleful Yews, the steep dark way To th' lowest Hell through dismal silence lay;

ake, ime,

ırfer

ie.

ght

e, pire)

(e) find heir e.

chus

There Stygian Mists infect the Road, and there New Ghosts and thin unfuneral'd Souls appear. Paleness and Cold furround the loathsome place, And new-come Spirits with a mournful pace, The way to Hell's chief Seat in dreadful numbers A thousand Avenues, a thousand Gates, Th' Insatiable Metropolis dilates; And as the Ocean's spacious Womb receives All Streams, yet room for coming Waters leaves, So the devouring place all Ghosts retains, Yet never fills, or of the Crowd complains. There the Pale Souls unbody'd loofely roam, Some haunt the Pleas, their Tyrant's Palace some. The rest, to pass their Sorrows, imitate The vain Employments of their Mortal State. Juno (fo far could Rage and Malice go) Could quit the Skies to find these Seats of Woe. But when her Entrance made the Threshold found Three headed Cerberus through Night profound, Shook Hell's wafte Empire with three dreadful Howls .

Whose hideous Eccho sear'd the trembling Souls.

The

Th

(Si

Bef

Wi

Th

Bla

WI

Up

Of

By

His

His

Stil

Th

WI

Th

WI

Hin Stil The Goddels calls the Night-born Furies straight, (Sisters implacable, and stern as Fate;)
Before the Dungeon's Gate, which Diamond
With Locks and Chains, and Barricadoes bound,
They sate; and out with long lean Fingers drew Black Snakes, which from their Heads like Elveloks grew.

ce.

ş,

e.

and Iful

The

When Juno they through murky gloom descry'd, Up rose the Fiends, and laid the prospect wide Of that dire place, which, from mens Crimes and Woes.

By th' name of Wicked through Hell's Empire goes.

There Tityus might be seen, his Breast display'd, His monstrous bulk o're nine huge Acres laid; His Liver by a thousand Vultures torn, Still new to their repeated Tortures born.

There Tantalus with thirst in Water dies, While bobbing Fruit still from his hunger slies.

There Sisyphus rolls up the weighty Stone, Which, when he hopes to lodge, is slipt and gone. Himself, Ixion to the Wheel saft bound, Still slies and follows in an endless round.

And

And Danau's Daughters too, whose barbarous hands
Could murther those whom all the sacred Bands
Of Blood and Marriage to themselves had join'd,
To fill the unbottom'd Cask with easeless pains confin'd.

Tuno lookt o're 'em all with lowring Eyes, But at Ixion most her Passions rise: But turn'd from him, the Sifyphus glanc'd o're, And why, faid she, should this poor Brother more Than all the rest endure? or why should He A Slave to these perpetual Tortures be? While Athamas, a Monarch proudly reigns. And with his Queen our Deity disdains? Then the declares the grounds of all her hate. Her journy down, and what she'd fain be at: That Cadmu's Royal House might quickly all In difinal ruins and confusion fall. And that by Furies Athamas enrag'd, Might be in some unnatural Act engag'd. Prayers, Promifes, Commands the blends in one, And eggs the Fiends importunately on.

Ba

A

A

Pe

Be

By

Iri

E

Th

Ar

Gr

As

Th

S d, pains ands more n one,

Toary

Hoary Tifiphone, when Juno ceas'd, Back from her Eyes her uncomb'd treffes preft; And from her Lips the Snakes the thrust aside, And thus in short to Juno's words repli'd. (mands

Talk's needless here, conclude your great Com-Perform'd! then leave, great Queen, these hateful Lands.

Return to that fweet Air which gently flies Beneath the Concave of your Native Skies!

Glad Juno quits the place, but fince grown fow! By those black steams which thro' Hell's Regions Iris with Dew her Miftress purifies E're she assumes her Seat above the Skies.

Tiliphone straight snatch'd a bloody Brand. Threw on her Plad with goary Crimson stain'd; With spotted twisted Snakes begirt her Waste, And from her Seat flew with malicious hafte. Grief, Fear, and Terror on her Journy wait, And Madness with a frightful Air and Gate. As they before the Thebane Palace light, The Posts, they say, shook with the dreadful fright,

The

188 METAMORPHOSIS.

The Iv'ry Gates put on a paler Hue,
And thence the Sun his lightfome Beams withdrew.
Ino and Athamas both terrifi'd
To scape from the prodigious Monsters, tri'd,
But stern Tisiphone oppos'd their way,
And stretch'd at length before their passage lay.
Then out she threw her meager Arms enchain'd
With knotted Snakes, the Snakes disturb'd complain'd.

Some on her Shoulders fall, some crawling sweep
Her Temples, and a constant hissing keep,
From their black Jaws the foaming Poison springs,
And oft they brandish out their threatning Stings;
Then from her monstrous Head two hideous Snakes
With her curst Hands the rabid Fury takes.
And at the Royal Couple hurls the Pests,
Which swiftly crawl around their panting Breasts,
Their Limbs indeed ne'er feel the subtle Wounds,
Their Minds, alas! the direful strokes consounds!
The ugly Worms with their infectious Breath,
Give all the Peace which fill'd their Bosoms, Death;

But

But

Or

She

Blac

Gre

The

Wit

Exa

Dari

Fron

And

And

The

She s

Whil

She t

Into

With

Her I

S

But le'st the Fiends infernal Task should fail,
Or innate Virtue o'er her Snakes prevail,
She a huge Dose of liquid Poysons brought,
Black Foam from Cerberus, when raving, caught,
Green Venom near the Banks of Lerna found;
These first the Fiends malicious Arts compound;
With these sh' had in a brazen Caldron brew'd,
Exactly mixt and boil'd in Humane Blood,
Dark wild Mistakes, forgetful Blindness drein'd
From Minds distracted, and a Judgment ban'd,
And Villany, and Tears, and headstrong Rage,
And cruel Thoughts, which murd'rous Deeds prefage.

m.

p.

gs,

gs; kes

fts.

s, ds!

th;

But

These, that they might the stronger Dose afford,
She with a Root of fatal Hemlock stir'd.
While Athamas and Ino trembling stand,
She turns her Potion with too sure a hand
Into their Bosoms; streight quite through their Souls,

With dire Effects, the working Poylon rouls.

Her Brand then whirling in a thouland Rings,

Blue Flames in a perpetual Circle flings.

Thus

Thus she at last her Hellish Conquest gain'd,
And thus perform'd sierce Juno's stern Command.
Then fast again her Snaky Girdle ties,
And thence to Hell's wasteRealms triumphant slies.
Streight Athamas, struck with a frantick Rage,
Cries out, Holla my Mates, here, here engage!
About these Woods six all your strongest Toils!
Hither the panting Lyoness recoils
Two Whelps with her, just now I lodg'd 'em here,
Such Savage Beasts, his Queen and Babes appear
To his disorder'd Fancy; out he slies,
And as Learehus met his bloodshot Eyes

With out-stretch'd Arms, and at his Father smil'd, He from his Mothers Bosom snatch'd the Child, And sling like whirling pash'd its Infant bones, With barbarous force against the senseless Stones. The Mother new grew surious too, by Woes Emrag'd, or by the working poylonous Dose:

Away she hurries with disshevel'd Hair, And with distracted howlings fills the Air.

With Melicerte in her Arms the flies,

And Evoke, O Bacchus! wildly cries;

Revengeful

Re

Ar

An

As

Ho

Of

Wi

Ino

And

The

Wh

(Fo

And

OA

Wh

A B

Som

See h

0 m

I too

If D

Revengeful Juno heard that hated Name,
And wretched Ino Buchus still exclaim.
And with a scornful Smile, may he, said she,
As lucky still to all his Fosterers be!

d.

ies.

ige,

ere:

r vil'd.

d. es,

nes.

13.

gef ul

High o'er the Seas there stands a mighty Rock, Hollow'd beneath with the continual Shock Of rolling Tides, the Summit rough and fleep, With threatning Brows far jutting o'er the Deep, Ino ftreight climb'd the Rock, with Madness ftrong, And off her Burden, with her felf she flung: The Waves beneath foam'd with the falling ftrokes When Venus wheedling to her Uncle fooke. (For from her Daughter, wretched Ino came, And now her pity Ino's Woes enflame) O Neptune, God of all the watry Field, Whose Power to that of Heav'n alone can yield. A Boon, that's great indeed, I ask, but oh, Some pity to my dear Relations show! See how they float on the Ionian Main: 0 make them Gods among thy watry Train! I too some Interest in the Seas may claim, If I from Foam originally came.

Foam

Foam snowy white, thrown up by Seas divine,
And still the Grecian Name be justly mine.

Neptune consents, their mortal Parts removes,
Their Looks with awful Majesty improves,
Their Features chang'd, and new their Titles fram'd,
And now Leucothoe and Palamon nam'd.

The Theban Ladies nicely trac'd the Ground,
And o' th' Rocks edge her latest footsteps found;
And thence her Death, and kind of Death conclude,
And streight with Hair and Garments torn, they shew'd

How far those publick Woes had reach'd their Hearts,

In Cadmus ruins how they bore their Parts.

At Juno then theyall their Passions vent;

Call her severe, too far on Vengeance bent,

Too far indulgent to her Rage, that she

So far should prosecute her Jealousy.

But Juno vext, And you your selves, said she,

Chief Monuments of my Revenge shall be.

So said, so done; for as her zealous Love

The first by drowning with her Queen would prove.

Off'ring

Tha Her

Wit

Of

An

On

An

Th

Wha The

Some And

Can And I Broke

The d lot hi

hey f

Off'ring to leap, all Motion left her Blood,
And there a Rock, fix'd on a Rock fhe flood.
One flruck her Arms against her Breasts enrag'd,
And streight her Arms a stiffning Cold engag'd.
This, toward the Sea by chance had stretch'd her Hands:

With Hands fo firetch'd the figur'd Marble flands.
That, as with cruel Hands her Curles fhe tore,
Her Hands and Curls a Stoney flifness were.
Whate're their Postures were, when turn'd toStone,
The Person still was by her Posture known;
Some turn'd to Fowls, that Promontory keep,
And with short dabbling Wings the rousing Ocean fweep.

Cadmus, unknowing Ino's hobler Fate,
and his young Grandsons now exalted State,
boke with successive Woes and Prodigies,
The daily Objects of his mournful Eyes,
treight quits the Town h'had built; as if the place,
to this own Fate, had influenc'd his Case.
Ind with his Spouse, thro' various Wandrings pass'd, they safe Illyria's Borders reach'd at last, 0

Where

n'd,

d; ude, hey

heir

ove.

194 METAMORPHOSIS.

Where now, with weighty Years and Grief grown As they their Families fatal Story told; (old. And, to divert their mournful Thoughts the more, Talk'd all their past and present Labours o're. If 'twas fome God, faid he, that Serpent own'd, Which once beneath my pointed Javelin groan'd, If fo, and still that God incens'd pursue The Fact, may I become a Serpent too! He spoke, and streight became a Serpent too. And on his Back the Scales obdurate grew. On his dark Skin bright blewish Spots arise, 'And on his Breaft he falls; his parted Thighs Now run together in a folding Train, Only his Arms awhile unchang'd remain. Then out he throws his still-remaining Arms, While a Salt Flood his yet unalter'd Visage warms Corre near, come near, Dearwretched Spouse, said He Touch me, while something yet remains of Me! Heret take my Hand, while I a Hand can show, Take it before I quite a Serpent grow! More he'd have spoke, but Fates his Tongue divide Which proper Sounds no more to Words Suppli'd;

Bu

B

7

SI

In

A

T

T

T

A

N

At

TH

wn

old,

ore,

'd,

d.

oin

s, arms

idHe

Me!

how,

divide

pli'd;

Bu

But Hist aloud when he'd have fain complain'd,
That Note he still by Natures leave retain'd.
His Wife now beats her naked Breasts, and cries,
Stay, Cadmus, stay! put off this strange Disguise!
This monstrous Shape, my Dear unhappy, quit!
But, ah, what's this? where shall I find thy Feet,
Thy Hands, thy Arms, Complexion, Face, O
where

Art thou thy felf, while I'm discoursing here!
Ye Gods, why main't I too a Serpent be!
She spoke, when licking all her Vilage, He
In her dear Bosoni, long acquainted, kept,
And round her Neck with gentle twinings crept;
Their Servants standing by, amaz'dly view'd
The stightful Change, when they as sondly shew'd
Their parting Loves, and with embraces kind,
About their Necks the harmless Serpents twin'd,
Now Two; and off together rowling slide,
And quickly in the neighbouring Forest hide.
And still Mankind they neither hurt nor hate,
Tho Serpents mindful of their ancient Humane State.

Tho

196 METAMORPHOSIS.

The both thus chang'd, their glorious Grandson rais'd

Their honour'd Names, for brave Atchievements prais'd,

To Bacchus now the Conquer'd Indians bow'd, And Greece was of his lofty Temples proud; Only Acrisius, of the same descent; June H W.T. Old Aba's Son, his jealous Doubts to vent, Refolv'd to stop the happy Conqu'rors course, And from his Argos kept the God by force; He'd neither own His high Descent from Jove, Nor cou'd the Gallant Perfeus e'er approve His Birth to him; nor would that Prince believe His Daughter cou'd by Golden show'rs conceive. Yet, (fuch the force of truth) Acrisius streight Renounce't his obstinately fond conceit, Repenting that h' had e'er the God profan'd, And not his Grandson as his own retain'd, For Bacchas now above the Skies was plac'd, And Perfeus with the wondrous Trophies grac'd. Of the prodigious Gorgon swiftly flew Through yielding Air, when Libia just in view, Fresh

F

W

Fr

W

TI

To

TI

H

Qu

Sav

Of

Til

Wi

Th

He

An

An

Sho

Her

For

Bey

Q're

Fresh bloody Drops Medusa's Head distill'd, Which Earth receiving, all the Country fill'd From her dark Womb with Serpents various kinds Which still the Traveller in those vast Deferts finds. Thence like some watry Cloud, which ruffling Gales Tofs here and there, the winged Warrior fails Thro' immense Tracts of Air, and thence descries, How like a Point the World beneath him lies. Quite round the Globe he cut his wondrous way Saw where the Bears and threatning Cancer lay; Oft he the West, the East as oft survey'd, Till when he faw the Day declin'd, afraid. With weari'd Wings to profecute his flight Thro' the damp Regions of the gloomy Night, He near the Mauritanian Palace falls, And begs a Lodging there, till Morning calls, And till the Sun, by fiery Horses drawn, Should make bright Day succeed the Purple dawn, Here reign'd the Son of Japhet, Atlas nam'd, For his unmatch'd Gigantick largeness fam'd. Beyond the Borders of the utmost Land, O're spacious Seas he stretch'd his wide Command, Where

d.

on its 12

-

efh

198 METAMORPHOSIS.

Where Phabus nightly cools his scorching Wain And fiery Horses in the foaming Main. A thousand Flocks and Herds his Pastures graz'd. And on his Fields no envious Neighbours gaz'd. Trees leav'd with Gold around his Orchards forung, Where golden Fruit on golden Branches hung. Dear Sir, faid Perfeus, if you'll please to grace With Smiles the Off-fpring of a glorious Race: Great Fove's my Father: If your foaring mind Is more to hear Heroick Acts inclin'd. Tho young in years, we gallant Deeds can show, If you'll but Lodging and Relief bestow. But Themis had of old his Fate declar'd: Which, with this Talk, the wary Prince compar'd, Atlas the time shall come when one of Fove's great Race

Shall seize thy golden Fruit, thy Royal Seat de-

This to prevent, the Monarch fenc'd in all His envy'd Orchard with a lofty Wall. A fleeplefs Dragon was its constant Guard, And Strangers he from all his Borders barr'd.

W here

S

N

B

Y

T

W

B

W

Y

T

M

D

H

H

H

H

Si

N

H

A

P

When

So now to Perfem ; hence! be gone! here needs No lying Stories of your mighty Deeds 100 1100 Be gone! left, if our strength must cope with you. You lose your Honour, and your Father too. Then strives to thrust the lingring Hero out. Who with foft Language mingles Brave and Stout. But fince too weak, (for who in strength could vy With Atlas?) Since you this small Grant deny. Yet take, faid He, one little Gift from Me. Then, looking off himfelf, he makes him fee Medufa's horrid Head; huge Atlas fo, and and Did with his mighty Bulk a mighty Mountain grow His Hair and Beard to leavy Weeds transform'd. His Hands and Arms an airy Level form'd; His Head, the Top like some vast Pico charg'd, His Bones grew Rocks, and all his Bulk enlarg'd. He (fo the Gods decreed) immenfely high, Since then supports the weight of all the Starry-sky. Now Æalus the Evening boiffrous Wind, Had in eternal Caves with Bars confin'd, And Lucifer, bright Harbinger of day; Perfeus, and All to bufiness call'd away;

So

ıg,

W,

d, reat

de-

Of

On

In

He

But

Oft

At

Sca

Her

His

And

The

And

Bot

Wh

No

And

Wh

When to his Feet again he lash'd his wings, Girt on his Faulchion fure, and boldly flings Through the wild airy Regions of the Skies, And o'en a thousand nameless Nations flies, I will And, with a flight furvey, those Countries past, He made the Ethiopian Lands at laft. 10 days of W There, for her Mothers Tongue, Andromeda By Ammon's Doom, a Pawn to Vengeance lay. Whom when the fharp ey'd tow'ring Hero fpy'd, With Arms to rugged Rocks feverely ty'd, But that her flowing Tears her Life betray'd, And that her Locks with fanning Breezes play'd. H'had ta'n for some fine Marble piece; but now Soft Flames in his unknowing Bosom glow; Ravish'd, amaz'd, he views the lovely Maid, And half forgets his flying airy Trade. Then, near her, takes the Rock, and, O, faid He, Bright charming Creature, fitter far to be In some kind Lover's foster Arms enchain'd, Then with this weight of barb'rous Fetters pain'd! Tell me, sweet Maid thy Countries Name and thine, And why Thee thus to Rocks, these pondrous Chains confine! Silent 109.

M

1

W.

1

. 4

we.

d,

d.

7

His

He,

H ine,

ous

Silent a while the blushing Virgin stay'd;
Of Manly Converse, rarely us'd, afraid;
Only her Tears, which still She might command,
In her fair Eyes like Rising-fountains stand.
Her snowy Hands her modest Looks had hid,
But that rough Chains her snowy Hands forbid;
Oft ask'd, (lest silence shou'd her Guilt accuse)
At last she both her Name and Country shews:
Scarce half her Tale was told, when sounding Waves

Her Fate foreshow, the hideous Monster laves
His Sides with Seas which to his passage yield,
And whelms his Bulk o're half the watry Field.
The Maid Shrieks out; her mournful Father's Cries,
And her distracted Mother's sympathize;
Both wretched now; but much more justly She,
Whose vainer Pride deserv'd her misery.
No help, alas! but useless Tears they bring,
And crying, round their fetter'd Daughter cling;
When Perseus thus: Weep thus no more in vain!
Few Minutes only now for help remain.

Should I, fair Danae's Son by thundring Jove, Perseus the Offspring of his Golden Love; Perfeus Medufa's Conqueror; should I Who through the Air with certain Pinions fly; Should I your Daughter for a Wife demand. I fure might in your choice the fairest stand. But I to those will greater Merits join. If Heav'n but second now my bold Design; And beg her as my Love's victorious meed. If now from Death by my affistance free'd. His offer gladly both with Pray'rs embrace, For who'd refuse it in that desperate Case? And, for a Dowry too, that Crown engage, Too weighty grown for their declining Age. Now, as some Gally forc'd with Oars and Tides Plows up the Ocean with its foaming fides, So the prodigious Monsters horrid force Breaks up the Waves with an impetuous course. And now no farther off than one might fling A Bullet with a Balearian Sling; The gallant Youth with sudden motion springs From Earth, and cuts the Air with active Wings;

And But Wh Stood

An

Wi

And Strue

And

And

The

And So en

Whi

Now

And

And as the hov'ring Hero's Martial shade With tremblings on the watry Surface play'd: The Beaft, enrag'd at the thin Phantom grew. And at the shade with utmost fury flew. But as Fove's Bird, when from a Cloud he spies Where on some Plain a Dragon basking lies; Stoops at his Back, and to prevent his Jaws, Thro's scaly Neck his crooked Pounces draws. So He the Air with nimble Wings divides, And plies the Monster's Back and rouling Sides; And with a lucky Thrust his Shoulder rives, And upo th' Hilts his greedy Falchion drives. Struck with fo deep a Wound, the Monster raves. And fiercely bounds above the frighted Waves; Then dives again, and with a dreadful fweep. With thick black Goare diffains the boiling deep. And as a Boar, which eager Hounds engage, So every way he vents his baffled Rage: While from his Fangs the wary Perfeus flies, And every way the futious Monfter plies: Now on his Back and Ribs like Anviles beats, Now on his Fish-like stern his strokes repeats.

gs ings

les

e.

And

BaA

The Beast then spouts such floods of watry Gore,

Persens durst trust his dabled Wings no more.

But spies a Rock, which bare in Calms might lie,

But under water when the Seas went high:

There straight the searless Hero takes his stand,

And grasps the Summit with his Swordless Hand;

And then, to crown his Conquest, strongly soins,

And thrusts his Sword oft through the dying Mon ster's Loins.

Now, for the Conquest, mighty Shouts and Cries
Ring round the Shores, and eccho to the Skies.
With Joy Cassiope and Cepheus rais'd,
Him as their Son receiv'd, his Actions praisd,
Call'd him their Family's Support and Stay,
On whose brave Arm their Hopes and Safety lay.
The Maid, the Motive, and the glorious Meed
Of all his Toils, now went unchain'd and free'd.
His Hands defis'd, the pious Hero laves
From Blood and Slaughter in the sacred Waves.
But lest the naked Sand should crush the Snakes
Which fill'd his dreadful Shield, green Leaves he takes, an additional shield, green Leaves he

And

An

An

An

The

Moi For

Diffi

The And

Thei

Which

And

Abov

Th

Го Т

The R

Pallas

in un

To M ut to

A rou

e.

10, nd:

oins,

ion-

es

ay.

d

dent

50 es

s ho

207

And

And Rods which deep beneath the Waters grew,
And on that Bed his Trophy softly threw;
The touch, the green and sappy Rods obdur'd,
And hardness to their Twigs and Leaves procur'd.
The Sea-Nymphs, with the strange Event surpriz'd,
More Rods, and with the same Success disguis'd.
For the dire Figure on the Neighb'ring ground
Diffus'd its Petrefactive Atoms round.
The Nymphs with care their alter'd Seeds remove,
And in the Seas prolifick Ooze improve;
Their Nature's so, the Corals still declare,
Which gather hardness in the open Air;
And what were pliant supple Twigs below,
Above inflexibly obdurate grow.

Three Altars now of Turf in order rife
To Three Supream Protecting Deities:
The Right to Mercury devoted stands,
Pallas the Left, the Midmost Jove commands.
In untam'd Heiser to Minerus bleeds,
To Mercury an yearling Calf succeeds;
But to his mighty Father thundring Jove,
A rough neck'd Leader of the bellowing Drove.

Then

Then, unendow'd, he weds Andromeda. The noblest Prize of that Triumphant Day. Hymen and Love their Nuptial Torches bore. And every Roof its flowry Garlands were; Rich Odours on their blazing Altars rife, And many a Vow, and many a Sacrifice : Sweet Flutes with Harps, and Pipes, and Voices try To vent their Mirth in Heav'nly Harmony. Straight wide the Palace Gates, commanded, flew, And all the rooms of State expos'd to view; Where Royal Furniture, and Royal Cheer, And all the Cephene Lords in pomp appear. The Banquer done, the quick capacious Bowls With generous Wines enlarge their cheerful Souls Then to instruct him Persew all invites In all their Country Laws, and facred Rites; To whom One, with a kind obliging Air, Does all their Customs and their Rives declare. His Story finish'd; Now, Great Sir, of You, Said he, we for a greater Favour fue: Your Godlike Story, and what wondrous way You fafely gain'd the Gorgon's dreadful prey?

J

To

A

W

W

Na

W

Th

Ife

Th

Ste

Ir

Th

Qf

Suc

I fa

W

An

He

Th

Wi

To whom the Courteous Hero straight replies,

A Plain beneath the frozen Axis lies,
With Walls, of native rugged Mountains, barr'd,
Whose only Pass two monstrous Sisters guard,
Nature on them one single Eye bestow'd,
With which the Sisters strowl'd by turns abroad.
This, as it was from hand to hand convey'd,
Iseiz'd, obscur'd by an impervious Shade (down
Then through dark ways, and winding Paths, and Steep horrid Rocks, with sounding Woods o'regrown, es try lew,

Is

;

re.

u, ray

Souls

I reach'd the Gorgon's Seat, where all around Thro' Fields and Roads I wondrous Figures found Of Men and Beafts transform'd to perfect Stone, Such by Medufa's frightful Afpect grown.

I fafely view'd her in my glittering Shield, Whose Orb her dire reflected Image fill'd.

And, while she lay in heavy slumbers dead, Her Snakes all hush'd, I lop't her dreadful Head. The gloomy Streams of whose prolific Gore Wing'd Pegafue and young Chryfaor bore.

To

To these, he added all those Dangers vast, Those Seas and Lands he in his Course had past: A How high, how low he wing'd his tedious way, And all the Starry Signs which in his paffage lay. Yet so he clos'd his Tale too soon: When One Of the Nobless demands, Why she alone Medufa, Eldest of 'em, all shou'd be Snake-Hair'd, and both her Younger Sifters free? To whom thus Perfews, Since you, Sir, enquire Of weighty things, I'll grant your just Defire. Medula once was for her Beauty fam'd, At whom a thousand Jealous Suitors aim'd; But more than all, her lovely Treffes charm'd, Whose golden Beams her coldest Lover's warm'd. (I've met with some who waited at her Court, And only Wonders of her Locks report ). Her Neptune feiz'd with luftful Passions wild, And in the chaft Minerva's Fane defil'd: The Virgin Goddess turn'd aside, and held Before her modest Eyes her facred Shield: But that the Crime might be in One reveng'd, To horrid Snakes Medufa's Curls she chang'd.

OT A A W

Line An Wille He William An Willi

id

And O're The

While Con affin
of Sto con to I fet

The Who

Soroa The f Ph

orw Adva

Says h

And that she might in future rolling years
O'reawe the Vicious World with pow'rful Fears,
The Snakes she made still in her Shield she bears.

The FIFTH BOOK.

The Argument of the Fifth Book.

While Perseus tells his Story, Phineus the Brother of Cepheus (who had formerly pretended to Andromeda) with his Companions makes an attempt to recover her. But Pallas assists Perseus, till partly by fighting, and partly by the sight of Medusa's Head, the Ravishers were kill'd, or turn'd into Stones. Palas then leaves her Brother, and visits Mount Helicon, where the Muses acquaint her with what had happen'd to Pyreneus, and the Pierides chang'd into Mag-Pies after a set Contest with them in singing of divers Transformations.

Hile thus his Tale th' obliging Hero told,
And did the Court in deep attention hold,
The Palace eccho'd with a Warlike found,
Whose dismal Notes their Nuptial Musick drown'd;
So roars the Sea, when with impetuous storms
The strugling Winds her flatt'ring Smooth deforms.

Phineus the first of all the noisy Crowd, forward in quarrels, and of Tumults proud; Advanc'd his pond'rous Launce, Lo, I appear, says he, the mighty Rape Revenger here.

Nor

Nor by thy Wings, nor Jove, tho' turn'd to gold. Shalt thou scape hence, or my dear Joys be fold; E're with his Threats his Arm compli'd, the King Cries out, Whence, Brother, can this madness To do vast Merits Right, is this the way? (Spring? Would you fuch Thanks for Her dear fafety pay? No Rape, you know, this gallant Youth defign'd, You heard Oraculous Amnon's facred Mind; (you, The angry Sea-Nymphs claim'd your Spouse from My Bowels were the dreadful Monster's due: You lost her then when she was doom'd to dye; That, and our Loss, it seems, would raise your Joy. Was't not enough to fee her bound, while you Her Spouse and Uncle no relief could shew? But now y'are mad another fav'd her Life; And you, forfooth, must claim your rightful Wife; But if your Wife, so dear, so priz'd, had been, Those mournful Rocks your valiant Loves had seen Perfeus now claims her by his conquering Sword, His own vast Merit, and our facred Word: Not that we think you were unfit for Her, But Him we justly to Her Death prefer.

H

N

U

A

Hi

An

Th

An

An

(A

Ye

An

He

And

Diff

Dea

But

And

To

No

I

old,

d;

ng

ness

ng?

y?

gn'd,

you,

from

;

u

· Joy.

Nife;

en,

1 feen

vord,

He ne're repli'd, but with a scouling Brow
Now on his Brother looks, on Perseus now.
Uncertain where his first Revenge was due;
At last, with Fury's utmost strength, he threw
His Lance at Perseus, but he lost his aim,
And struck it in the Couches trembling Frame;
Then from the Couch brave Perseus stercely springs,
And back the Launce with stronger sury slings;
An Altar screen'd the Dastard from the Blow,
(An Altar oft protects a Villain so)
Yet Rhatus in its stall pass it took,
And in his Brain the deadly Javelin stuck:
He fell, with dying Heels he spurn'd the Floor,
And dash'd the Tables with his Crimson Gore.

But now the Rabble all with rage enflam'd,
Discharg'd their Spears, and boldly some proclaim'd
Death as their King's, and Death as Perseus's doom,
But Cepheus now had wisely left the Room;
And to the Gods of Hospitality,
To Faith and Honour too appeal'd, that He
No Partizan in those unhappy Broils would be.

Then

212 METAMORPHOSIS.

Then Pallas in his Breast new strength instill'd, And fenc'd her Brother with her dreadful Shield.

Athis, a lovely Indian Youth, was there,
Whom fair Limnate did to Ganges bear;
Blooming at just Sixteen, and gaily drest
In his embroyder'd Tyrian-purple Vest:
Rich Chains of Gold his snowy Neck went round,
His Locks perfum'd, with crimson Fillets bound;
A Launce the Youth with dextrous grace could
And sinely draw his rarely-failing Bow. (throw,
While bending now, an Altar's slaming Brand
Dash'd out his Brains from Persens's dreadful Hand.

Assyrian Lycabas observ'd the Boy,
His dear Companion once, his only Joy,
With his own Blood deform'd, resign his breath

His dear Companion once, his only Joy,
With his own Blood deform'd, refign his breath
To th' rude Embraces of untimely Death;
Then wept, and fnatch'd his Bow, and loudly cri'd,
Not Boys, but Men, shou'd by your Arms have dy'd.

Revenge waits on your short-liv'd Joys; no praise But Envy, such unmanly Deeds can raise.

He

He

Ar

Hi

Gr

De

On

Hi:

A

Slip

No

Bui An

Wi

For

An

Do

Next

He spoke, and shot, the weak-drawn Arrow sung,
And loosely on the Hero's Vestment hung.
His Faulchion stain'd with dire Medusa's Blood, Great Perseus drew; the home-thrust Faulchion stood

Il'd,

und,

nd;

ould

ow,

and.

h ri'd,

have raise

He

Wound.

d.

Deep in his gaping Breast; his swimming Eyes Only look'd out for Athis; soon he spies His breathless Friend, and o're him gently falls, Happy at least in their united Funerals.

Then eager Phorbas, and Amphimedon,
A Lybian this, that a Syenian's Son,
Slipp'd on the bloody Floor; the dreadful Sword
No time for their recov'ry could afford.
But thro' the Lybian's fide with violent haft, (past.
And the Syenian's Throat, the dreadful Faulchion
But Actor's Son, whose Hands a Poll-ax wield,
Without a Sword the Gallant Perseus kill'd;
For in both hands a weighty Bowl he took,
And o're the face the threatning Warrior strook:
Down fell the Warrior straight, and spurn'd the ground,
And Blood and Wine rush'd from his dubious

214 METAMORPHOSIS.

Next Abaris and Polydamon dy'd, The first to Great Semiramis ally'd. The last a Scythian; bold Lycetus fell, And Elice and Clitus funk to Hell. While Perfeus stood like some revenging God, And o're the Breafts of flaughter'd Champions trod. Phineus aloof a trembling Javelin threw, Which, by mistake, at peaceful Ida flew. In vain a Neuter in those Broils he stood; Now with fierce Eyes the faithless Prince he view'd: Since me, faid He, you'll needs a Party make, This Launce, base Phineus, for your kindness take. Then tore the Launce from his own wounded Side, But bled too fast, and quickly fainting di'd. Next Clymenus the fam'd Odites kill'd,

Next Clymenus the fam'd Odites kill'd,
Who the next place to Royal Cepheus fill'd;
Hypseus Prothenor kill'd, himself opprest,
Straight by a stronger Arm. Among the rest
Emathion, reverenc'd for his virtuous Age,
Whose strength cou'd in no russing Broils engage;
Yet with his Tongue against these Broils inveigh'd,
Till Chromis with his facrilegious Blade,

While

W

Y

A

B

(I

Fe

Fr

B

S

T

A

V

H

While he embrace'd an Altar, lopt his Head,
Which falling on that friendly Altar, bled:
Yet peace to th' last his dying Tongue desir'd,
And his fair Soul in facred slames expir'd.
Broteas and Ammon Twins, for Whorle bats fam'd,
(If Swords could be by weighty Whorle bats tam'd)
Fell both by Phineus's hand; and Ceres Priest
From his white Wreaths his impious Hand dismiss'd.

And thou sweet Bard, unus'd to Wars Alarms, Born all for Love and Muses peaceful Charms, Summon'd their Feast with thy sweet Voice to While now unarm'd, and in a distant place (grace, Thou stoods, rough Petalus with a barbarous Jest, Cri'd, Hence dull Fool, go sing in Hell the rest; A strong Back-blow follow'd his words; but he Whose Soul was all wrapt up in Harmony, With dying Fingers touch'd his trembling Lyre, Whose last softs in mournful Notes expire.

The fierce Lycormas soon reveng'd his Fall, Snatching a Leaver from the neighb'ring Wall, He dash'd his Brains about his batter'd Crown; So Petalus, so Bullocks maul'd, sink down.

P 4

Cinyphian

rod.

w'd:

ake. ide,

ge;

hile

Cinyphian Pelates the next Leaver seiz'd;
But Corythus with his sharp Javelin eas'd
His hand, and to the Wall he pinn'd it fast,
While thro' his Guts the next man's Faulchion past:
Nor could he fall, but by the Wall he stood,
And wash'd the Marble with a crimson flood.

Next Melanus, a Friend of Perseus dy'd;
And Dorylas more rich than all beside;
The wealthy Dorylas, whose spacious Field
Alike could heaps of Corn and Treasures yield;
Deep in his Groin he now receiv'd a Wound,
Which when the flouting Giver mortal found,
And saw his heaving Breasts, and rolling Eyes,
Lo, here, says he, the mighty Farmer lies,
For all his Lands of this small spot posses;
And lest his Carcass with that biting Jest.
Perseus, a Spear from one expiring snatch'd,
And Haleyoneus for his Wit dispatch'd,
Through Nose, and Jaws, and Neck, at once he
And out behind the pointed Javelin stuck. (struck.

While Fortune smil'd, he sent a different Doom To two Descendants from one fruitful Womb; T

A

T

A

0

B

T

T

C

A

B

V

B

A

P

A

T

A Spear thro' both his Thighs the Elder bore. The Younger's Mouth the Launce as rudely tore. Egyptian Celadon, and Aftreus dv'd: Astreus, a Syrian, by his Mothers side. An unknown Father's Son : Ethion too. Who, all in vain, Fates future Secrets knew; Then a Page Royal, young Thoactes fell. And Parricide Agyrtes funk to Hell. On weari'd Perfeus still his Work increast. By huge Confederate Multitudes opprest: The fenfless Croud advanc'd a shameful Cause. To fink true Worth, and hospitable Laws: Cepheus with Prayers, Caffiope with cries, Andromeda with Tears her Lord supplies; But all that little helpless Noise was drown'd, With dving Groans, and Arms repeated found: Bellona dash'd the Palace-walls with Blood, And cruel Broils with growing Rage renew'd. Phineus, and thousand more, our Hero close, And each rude Hand his violent Weapon throws; One fingle Life the Rabble wou'd affail, Thick as the roughest Storms of Winters Hail;

aft:

e he

m

A

A friendly Pillar now his Back secur'd,
While, fearless, he their rude Assaults endur'd:
They urg'd the Hero home on either side;
Molpeus on his lest, his right Ethemon ply'd.

As when some Tyger pinch'd with Hunger, scales Some losty Hill, and thence o'erlooks the Vales, The several Herds distract his hungry Rage, And all he gladly wou'd at once engage.

So Perseus thoughts a while suspended lay,
Till wounded Molpeus, timely, lest the fray.
For still Ethemon prest him sore; but whiles
His heedless Fury but it self beguiles,
His Sword he on the unseen Marble broke,
The Point reversing, with the surious stroke,
Stuck in its Master's Throat; but since it fail'd
In his dispatch, the Hero's Sword prevail'd.
Nor could his Tears, nor Arms, defenceless now,
Tho humbly rais'd, divert the mortal Blow.

When Perseus saw he still must lose the Field,
And Virtue's Force to endless Numbers yield:
For once, said he, an Enemy's help I'll use,
Look off my Friends! and straight to all he shews

I

I

I

1

S

The Gorgon's horrid Face; when Thefeelus, Think not with Monster, Fool, to conquer us, He faid, and then his Launce almost He threw; But straight a Statue in that Posture grew. Ampys the next struck at his valiant Breast, But flood by pretrefactive Steams oppreft. Then Nileus, who from Nile had feign'd his Race. And noble Sheild feven parting Rivers grace : Glittering with Silver part, and part with Gold; See here, said he, our sacred Stem behold. Thy Death grows noble by our glorious hand! But his last Breath without its found remain'd: And the no found cou'd from the Marble break, The gaping Statue almost seem'd to speak. But Errx at the daftard Rabble form'd ; Base Brutes, said He, by your own Fears transform'd, Not by that Gorgon's looks; come on! our Arms Shall baffle foon that Magick Youngster's charms! And on h'had rush'd indeed; but now was grown An armed Image, and a lifeless Stone.

These justly suffer'd, only one who fought On Perseus side, while on his Sword he thought;

His

d, news

ľď

ow.

cales

s,

news The His Eyes, regardless, on the Gorgon cast,
And an eternal Statue there stood fast.
One thought him still alive, and on him try'd
His Sword, the Sword rung on his Marble-side;
He stood amaz'd a while, then turn'd to Stone,
And still amazement in his looks was shown.
But Names were endless, several hundreds more
With threatning Arms their listed Launces bore;
As many hundreds, by the Gorgon chang'd,
Fine Statues stood in careless Order rang'd.

Phineus repents his groundless Broil, but how To act can't tell; he sees his Comrades now Meer Marbles all; he oft their Names repeats, And calls, and oft their usual helps intreats; Scarce could he think the change was true; then tri'd, But his Spears point the Marble-shapes defi'd; Then looking off, his Arms he side long rear'd, And a poor aukward Penitent appear'd.

Perseus, said he, these Stones your Conquests
O now those petrifying Looks remove! (prove;
Remove that horrid Head! this Quarrel first
No Malice rais'd, no fond Ambition nurst;

Not

S

I

SI

P

T

W

No

Bu

Ye

Hi

An

Cre

Not for a Crown, but Wife, these Arms we bore; I lov'd her first, but you deserv'd her more; I yield, brave Sir, I yield, be yours the Prize, Your Suppliant but for One poor Life applies!

He begg'd, but towards him durst not turn his Face;

We'll grant, said Perseus, Sir, our utmost grace,
A grateful Boon to such a Dastard sure,
Stand ever here from bloody Swords secure!
I to your Name a Monument will raise Shall last till this wide Universe decays;
Possess here still our Royal Father's House,
The daily comfort of your longing Spouse!
He spoke, and straight Medusa's Head applies
Where the poor trembling Wretch had turn'd his Eyes.

Nor could he now turn back his lifeless look,
But Neck and Eyes a Rocky hardness took;
Yet fear predominant in his Visage sate,
His Looks dejected, and his suppliant State, (Pate.)
And Arms submissively rais'd, betray'd his guilty

There

W

i'd,

efts

ve;

Not

Now

Now Perfeus with his Bride, fair Argos sein'd. Where Pratus Danaës's Adversary reign'd: Acrifius to his Arms was forc'd to yield, And now the Throne Usurping Presus fill'd. But neither Arms nor Forts that barb'rous Slave From the grim Gorgon's dreadful Snakes could fave. So Polydett, who small Seriphus sway'd, No Homage to the Conquiring Hero paid. He no respect to suffering Virtue shew'd. But with base Spleen his gallant Acts pursu'd: Medufa's Death he but a Sham declar'd, And with detracting flights his Praise impair'd. To whom the Youth, against your Scandal, Sir, We'll but one little Evidence prefer; (Thew'd, The reft! Look off! then straight the Snakes he

Thus far did Pallas on her Brother wait,
And with wife care fecur'd his dubious state;
Now from Seriphus, wrapt in Cloudy Skies,
Straight by the nearest Course to Thebes She slies.
Till, spacious Seas and various Islands past,
She reach'd the Muses sacred Hills at last.

A bloodless Stone the furly Tyrant stood.

270 F.

There

T

SI

N

0

I

B

T

H

Y

B

F

T

T

A

SI

W

SI

A

Q

G

There down the fate, and with an Air divine, She thus discours'd among the Learned Nine; Me to this place the ftrange Relations bring Of your prodigious Pegalaan Spring; I faw that Horfe rife from Medula's gore, But have not feen that Hoof-rais'd Stream before. To whom Urania, for the Rest replid, Happy that welcome Cause, what e're cou'd guide Your facred footsteps hither ! happier we, Bleft with the fmiles of Wifdom's Deity! Fame told you truth, his Hoof first rais'd the Spring; They then the Goddess to their Fountain bring: That a Horse-hoof should give that Fountain birth, And burft the Fetters of tenacious Earth, (round, She wonder'd long; then view'd the Land-scape Where shady Groves the lofty Mountains crown'd: She fees cool Grotts, and useful mingling Sweets, And ev'ry where delightful Objects meets. And calls the Muses, and their Studies bleft Of folitary peaceful Shades possest.

ve.

۲,

v'd.

he 157

5.

ere

When fair Urania thus her Speech resum'd, Goddels Divine, whose Wisdom it's presum'd,

Did

224 METAMORPHOSIS.

Did not superior Cares your thoughts employ. Our bleft Society might long enjoy, Our Arts, our Seats you justly praise, and we Were bleft enough, if but from Dangers free: But what wont Villains dare? Our Virgin Souls, Harmless and weak, each little Fright controuls. Before our Eyes, still fierce Pireneus stands, I scarce, methinks, have yet well scap'd his hands. He with his Thracian Troops had Daulis gain'd, And now in his injurious Conquefts reign'd; Us, travelling by to great Apollo's Dome, He fees, adores, and then invites us home; Not for Devotion, but his impious Mind Was all to Rapes and Barb'rous Lufts inclin'd. Fair Muses rest a while, said he; nor fear In fuch a Storm t' accept a shelter here; ('Twas then a Storm indeed) bleft Deities Have often stoop'd to meaner Sheds than these. Mov'd by kind Words, and the Tempestuous Air, We grant his Wish, and to his Porch repair; (o're, The Rain once past, and Southern Clouds blown As when the Northern lightfome Day restore,

We

T

T

A

An

Pal

An

Ni

And

The

The

Tol

A fai

Nine

A Mc

Who,

Thro

Their

We move, the Tyrant stops the way; a Rape
Attempts, which we on Aiery Wings escape;
Up to a Tower he runs; And sure, said he,
That Course you take may serve as well for me.
Then off he springs, but falls; his batter'd Face,
And slying Brains, and impious Blood defil'd the Place.

Thus talk'd the Muse, when loud Salutes around, And fluttering Wings from losty Trees resound; Pallas looks up, Whose Tongueswere those, enquires, And Notes, so near resembling Ours, admires; Nine Pyes they were, who there bewail'd their Fate,

s.

Sb

r.

re,

wn

Ve

And nimbly still in Humane Tones wou'd prate.
Then to the Goddess thus the Muse addrest;
These too, of late, the Feather'd Quire encreast;
To Pieros these one fruitful Mother bore;
A fair addition to his wealthy Store:
Nine times Enippe begg'd Lucina's Aid,
A Mother so of nine fair Daughter made;
Who, when grown up, of their own Numbers proud,
Thro' Greece and Macedon proclaim'd aloud

226 METAMORPHOSIS.

Their wondrous Gifts, at length came here, and With words abfurd and fawcy challenge us: (thus Muses forbear to cheat the thoughtless Throng With ill fet Tunes, and inharmonious Song: If you to Voice or Skill pretend, we dare With you for Number, Voice, and Skill compare: We own you flutter on the Wings of Fame, But We a nobler Share in Glory claim; Your Hippocrene and Aganippe Stake, And for our Pledge delightful Tempe take: We'll to the Sentence of the Nymphs submit, The fairest Arbiters of Art and Wit. Too mean to us the daring Challenge feem'd, But to have yielded had been worse esteem'd; The Nymphs Elect, by their own Waters Iwear, And round on Rocky Seats the Contest hear; When one, before her Turn, uncall'd, begins, And-leudly of Coeleftial Battels fings. The Gyant-Race in swelling strains applauds, And Burlesques all the Actions of the Gods. She fings, how huge Earth-born Typhaus rag'd, And all the Gods in Fears and Flights engag'd;

Til

1

T

T

30

T

B

P

Ve

D

T

W

To

N

In

Sol

She

Th

To

He

Th

An

Till Nile's fair Land the Fugitives Suppli'd With lurking Holes, the trembling Croud to hide. Thither the Monster stalk'd, but then, for fear, The frighted Gods in various Shapes appear. Jove was a Ram, large Horns from thence we find To Ammon's Image ancient Moors assign'd; Bacchus a Goat; Apollo feem'd a Crow; Phabe a Cat, Juno a Milk-white Cow ; Venus a Fifh polleft, and Mercury Did close within the poys'nous Ibis lie. Thus to her Harp the wildly fung; When we Were call'd on for our Part; but that must be Too mean for your bleft Ears, whose nicer Taffe No Minutes can on our dull triflings waste. In your fweet Airs, the Goddels straight replid, Soft and infentibly the Minutes flide; She faid, and on a shady Bank reclin'd; The Muse proceeds; We all our Task assign'd To our Callione; the role, and round Her careless Curls with Ivy Garlands bound;

And to her Lyre at last thus sweetly sings:

Her careless Curls with Ivy Garlands bound;
Then with a prelude tasts the chiding Strings,

ga;

ear,

15,

s,

and hus

2

I fing

228 METAMORPHOSIS.

I fing the Queen who first our Furrows plough'd. Who first sweet Fruits and easy Food allow'd. Ceres hift tam'd us with her gentler Laws, From her kind Hand the World Subliftence draws; Her Name I fing, O could my Fancy raife What the deferves! and the deferves our praise! That huge himb'd Monster, whose Gigantick Pride Attacqu'd the Skies, and ev'ry God defi'd, Now, with Sicilia's dreadful weight opprest, Moves, but with mighty pains, his heaving Breaft; He struggles oft, and oft attempts to rife, But on his Right-hand vast Pelorus lies; On's Left Pachynus, Lilibaum's spread O're his huge Thighs, and Ætna keeps his Head; There fierce Typhaus lies at large supine, And from his Throat Sulphureous Vapours shine: Oft with strong throws the Monster strives t' abate Nept His load of Towns, and the rough Mountain's Shall (quakes, Let's weight, Whence Earthquakes rife; Hell's gloomy Monarch Still 1 Now his dark Empire's strong Foundation shakes, Amo

Lyte at last thus I weetly Thes

Left

And

Rou

And

Whi

But

T

His

Venu

And

My

Thy

Obfe

At o

Grea

Lest sudden day thro' rending Earth should flow, And terrify the trembling Shades below. (Throne, Rous'd with fuch Fears, the Tyrant leaves his And at his Lash his Cole black Courfers groan; While through the Isle he makes his Cavalcade, But finds no Ruins there nor ancient frengths decay'd. and the fine ft, fwifted bits

Those Fears all past, now with a fauntring pace His careless Steeds the flow'ry Meadows trace; Venus there fpy'd him from Heav'ns lofty Seats, And thus her winged Son with smiles intreat; My Arts, my Arms, my Strength, my Love, faid Thy Suppliant once, my little Life, I'll be, (the, Observe you loytering God, go send a Dart At once quite through the gloomy Tyrant's Heart. ine: Great Jove himself, and all the Gods above, Abate Neptune, and all his Court, Submit to Love: ain's shall Hell be free? enlarge our Empire, Boy, akes, Let's now, at length, the World's third part enjoy narch Still some Above our utmost strength despile, kes, Among our Selves our Empire slighted lies:

h'd,

WS; ride

aft;

We

ead;

Thou see'st how Palles and Dissa scorn
Our Shafts, and Proserpine, if long forborn,
Affects the Glories of a Virgin State,
And Love's fost Vows pursues with Childish Hate, Go then! fair Love, and Beauties Price enhance,
And the Coy Girl to Pluto's Throne advance.
She spoke, the Winged Boy with eager cares
One, and the surest, swiftest Shaft prepares;
Then bends, and nocks, and shoots; the Shaft soon
And on his Heart imprest a fatal Wound. (found,

Near Henna's well-built Walls a spacious Lake,
Now Pergus nam'd, collected Waters make;
Swans sing not more on sweet Caister's Streams;
The Sun scarce finds it with his searching Beams,
Checkt by aspiring Groves; and all around
The flow'ry Banks with losty Woods are crown'd:
The waving Boughs a grateful coolness bring,
And budding Plow'rs make a perpetual Spring.
While Proserpine there in her walk had stopt,
And Violets sweet and pretty Snow-drops cropt:
While with her Mates, the playful Virgin vies,
And her large Skirt, and Snowy Bosome plies

With

W

T

0

A

0

T

H

T

A

(

F

With similing Sweets. The wounded Plato came,
And saw, and lov'd with that impetuous Flame,
At once he carry'd off the charming Prize,
The frighted Goddess, with her loudest Cries
Oft on her Mates, oft on her Mother calls,
And from her Lap her fragrant Treasure falls;
And She (such Innocence in Youth remains)
Of that small Loss among the rest complains.
The Thief drives on, and by their several Names
His Hot-mouth'd Steeds with vig'rous hear enflames,

And o're their brawny Necks and flowing Mains
With eager out-cries shakes the sooty Reins; (flies'
Then through deep Pools and sulphurous Stench he And thro' Twin Lakes, which from hot Ruptures rise;

(Where two fair Ports a Demi-Island made, And in times past poor banish'd Heroes stay'd And sirst a City's large Foundations laid. And Arethusa at a distance slows From Cyane) two little Points enclose

With

t:

s, late,

foon

und.

ke,

5; ıs,

n'd:

e,

A Lake,

METAMORPHOSIS.

A Lake, and Crane the Lake was nam'd, A Nymph among the fair Sicilians fam'd; Who, while on her own humble Waves she trod. She in his hafte observ'd the flying God: Stop here, faid she, no farther here you go, You shan't be Son-in-law to Ceres so; Not by fuch Violence, but foft Amours And tender Sighs, you shou'd have made her Yours: If small Affairs we may with greater weigh, My dear Anapis woo'd a gentler way : My Virgin-breaft with fofter flames he warm'd, And did not fright me to his Bed, but charm'd. She faid, and with her Arms His Course oppos'd, When the grim Prince with opposition rous'd, Cheer'd up his dreadful Steeds, and at one stroke His pond'rous Mace thro' Earth's firm furface broke: The frighted Earth to its dark Center rends, And down at once the furious God descends. But Cyane, for her loft Goddess griev'd, And that Affront her facred Streams receiv'd; In her fad mind the cureless Wound she bears, And foftly wasts with never-ceasing Tears.

She,

Sh

N

He

He

He

Be

He

Fo

TI

Ar

He

TI

TH

Or

He

TH

Tu

Th

TH

Ar

She, who a Goddess o're the Waters reign'd,
Now, of her self, but one small Rill remain'd;
Her Limbs by slow degrees were softer made,
Her pliant Bones the gentlest Hand obey'd;
Her Nails grew soft, her smaller Members all
Before the rest in Liquid Humours fall,
Her Hair, Hands, Legs, and Feet, nor was it strange

For the small Parts to Waters soonest change.

Then her sirm Back, her Shoulders, and her Side,
And yielding Breasts all off in Rivolets slide;
Her Veins no more with Blood, but Waters sill'd,
The whole no solid now, but sleeting Streams cou'd yield.

The Mother still her Daughter seeks in vain On every Coast, and o'er the spacious Main. Her in her search the dawning Morning sound, The Evening-star too met her in his round; Two Pines she lights at Ætva's Flames, with those Thro' wet dark Nights the restless Wanderer goes; The same walks still she with the Day begun, And never ended with the falling Sun;

1e,

Quite

Quite faint with thirst, and far from cooling Springs, Her to a small thatch'd Cell her Journey brings; She knocks; an aged Dame looks out, and fees The Goddess, and when ask'd with bending Knees, A Bowl the charitable Beldam brought Homely, but fill'd with a fweet wholesom Draught, While with a hearty Soop she quench'd her Thirst, Out in loud Grins, a faucy Varlet burft, And Tofs pot cri'd; the Goddess angry grew, And in his Face the small remainders threw. His Face grew freckled, Legs his Arms displac'd. And a finall Tail his changing Members grac'd. Small was his Shape, the les mischievous he, Of Lizzards such the smaller Species be. Th' old Dame amaz'd, with Tears, to catch him But he runs to a little Hole to hide. (try'd, A Name too, proper to his Hieu, he bore, And thefe small Spots which on his sides he wore. 'Twere long to tell how much by Sea, by Land, The Goddess search'd, when none to search re-She to Sicilia last return'd, and while (main'd. With curious Looks she search'd the spacious Isle, gs,

es,

ht.

rft,

d,

him

y'd,

ł.

re-

in'd. e,

To

To Cyane she came, who all had told, But her new change her forward Speech control'd; Yet, what she cou'd, the Spring her Girdle show'd, Which where she sunk, still on her Waters slow'd.

The Goddess then, as if her loss before Had been unknown, her flowing Treffes tore. Dash'd her own Breast with unrelenting Blows, Yet ne're the more her Daughters Refuge knows; But curft the ungrateful Countries all around, Unworthily with her rich Bleffings crown'd. Above the rest she damn'd Sicilia, where The last remains of her lost Child appear; With furious Hands she breaks the toiling Ploughs, And round about her Plagues at random throws. Ploughmen and Oxen, heaps on heaps she lays, Their Fields all ruins, and their Seeds decays. O're that rich Glebe, fam'd thro' the hungry World, She nipping Frofts, and blafting Mildews hurld; Now Rains, now Drowth, now Stars or Winds destroy.

And greedy Fowls, and Thorns, and Tares alloy

Their

Their purer Wheat; and careless Knot-grass round. And Weeds their Fields, and all their Crops confound. While the fad Goddess thus her Woes exprest. Her Sorrows touch'd fair Arethula's Breast. Who from her Spring, her Locks all dropping, rofe, Which backwards from her lovely Face she throws. Then speaks, O Mother, whose unweari'd Toils Has for a Daughter fearch'd remotest Soils! Mother of Bleffings! now your Queft give o're, Be angry with your faithful Earth no more. Unwilling Earth with Pluto's force compli'd; I plead not on my Native Countries fide. In Sicily a Stranger I was bred Near Pifa, Elis still preserves my Head. Yet, here at rest, these happy Fields I love, And wou'd for them your gentler Paffion move! How to Sicilia I from Elis flow'd, And found beneath eternal Deeps a Road. When you're more pleas'd, and lefs perplex'd with I'll at a better time at large declare: A pals to me the pervious Earth allows, From hellow Deeps I here exalt my Brows.

Here

E

1

B

Here I, reviv'd again, have Heaven in view, But while thro' Strgian Deeps my Streams I drew I saw Proferpina, your Daughter, there; Her Looks indeed not wholly free from fear. Yet her Grandeur in those dark Realms is seen. She's Pluto's Spouse, and Hell's Triumphant Queen. Senfeless as Rocks, the doleful Mother stood. Struck with the fatal news; but (as a Flood Of thoughtless Rage, follows a storm of Woes) Away thro' yielding Air toward Heaven the goes. With clouded Brows, and loofe dishevell'd Hairs. She there before Jove's facred Throne appears. Lo, I great Jove, faid she, A suppliant grown, Beg pity for my Daughter, and thy own; If the poor Mother can no fayour find Thy own dear Child must sure affect thy mind: Let not thy Daughter's fortunes harfher be, H Meerly because she once was born of me! Look'd for fo long in vain, at last the's found But so to find her, rakes the bleeding Wound; Where now the is, I may for cetain know, ..... Ah, fad discovery of a certain Woe! novel but But

h

e,

re

But we'll forgive the Rape, if he'll restore The Virgin-treasure, and pretend no more. What e're my Daughter gets, yours fure might claim Above a Ravisher's ignoble Name. Then Tove replies, In our dear Daughters care And love, with you We bear an equal share. But if things by their proper Names we call, This was but Love, no Injury at all. So great a Son-in law can bring no fhame, If you confent, and but reverse his Name; Tove's Brother needs must of himself be great Much more possest of an Imperial Seat, Nay, our Superior, had the Lots been kind : But, if they needs must part to ease your mind, Back Proferpine, if fasting still, may go, Bile must stay there, the Fates command it so.

Ι

F

He spoke, pleas'd Ceres doubts not now to bring Her Daughter back, but Fates forbad the thing. Th' unhappy Maid, alas! had broke her fast, While careless she through noble Gardens pass'd, A Citron from th' Inviting-Bough she pull'd, And seven fair Grains thence for her Breakfast cull'd;

Ascalaphus alone, black Orphne's Son,
Born in those gloomy Shades to Acheron.
Orphne, among the Nymphs of Hell renown'd,
With dusky Acheron's hot Passions crown'd;
Ascalaphus observ'd the tasting Maid,
And his black Tongue her hop'd return betray'd.
Hells Queen sighs deep, and with sulphureous
Waves,

Fierce and enrag'd, the Traytors head she laves:
It runs to Beak, and Plumes, and glaring Eyes,
And spreading-Wings from his lank Body rise;
He seems all Face with crooked Pounces arm'd,
But lazy Sloth his spreading Pinions charm'd:
A Schriech Owl now obscene to mortal Eyes,
With Omens dire attended where he slies.

Tell-tales deserve such Fate; but who cou'd grace You, charming Sirenes, with a Maiden Face To your Birds feet and wings? Was it because When Proserpine was lost, by Friendship's Laws You, then her Play-mates, sought her every where? And that your marks of Love the Seas might bear, kfast

m

O

Eg ring

g.

d,

You wish'd for Wings to stutter o're the Main,
And did your wish from yielding Gods obtain?
Yet lest your Voice, contriv'd to charm the Ear,
Shou'd lost or useless by the change appear,
Your Beauties still, and Virgin looks remain,
And you your old harmonious Air retain.

To ease his Brother's, and his Sister's hearts.

The Queen her Reign o're Earth and Hell divides;
And six Months bere, and six below resides;
Soon with a cheerful Air, and losty Mein,
She, who was sollen all before, was seen.

Brisk as the Sun, when watry Clouds o're-blown
His radiant Beams are with advantage shown.
And Ceres, throughly pleas'd, her Debt requires;

And Arethola's Tale at large desires.

Her Waves now hush'd, the Goddess rais'd her

Above those Streams by Cristal Fountains fed;
Then with her Hands she dries her Sea-green Hairs,

And thus Alphans old Amour declares.

woY You

Once

i

Y

N

O

İ.

As

W

If

A

So

Al

On

W

App

Once an Acham Nymph was I, and none
More for Activity in Huming known; None with more art or care could spread their Toils,

100

s,

S;

n

Si

her есп

nce

None more was pleas'd with Forrest nobler

And the for courage more, than Beauty, fam'd, My Beauties too the flattering World proclaim'd, Yet when the Croud my pretry Features prais'd, No pleasure that, but endless Blushes rais'd Others perhaps admired fuch Toys as thefe; I almost thought it was a Crime to please. As once I from th' Areadian Woods return'd, With equal heats of Sun and hunting Burn'd; I found a fost deep Stream, thro' whose pure Wave A pleasant fight the rolling Pebbles gave. So clear the River was, fo smooth the Stream, A Mirror this, and that a Sky might feem. On the fleep banging Banks a chearful Shade White Sallows twin'd with hoary Poplars made; Approaching, first my Feet the Cold aslay, And next my Knees; till wholly stripe, I lay

242 METAMORTHOTIS.

My Cloaths on the green Bank, then plunging in,
A thousand Sports I on the Waves begin to stold
Now back, now forward firetch, now disc. now

I down affoat the lazy River go anom ano. When from the middle Stream I hear a Voice And leap a shore, fear'd with the murmuring soils A From the deep Brook, Alehans cries, Q where WM O where flies Arethufal, I who hear, and main will Stript as I was, without my Cloaths (for they Without my reach beyond the River law reg attribo Fly thence; he follows fwift, while naked I floris ! Seem'd more obnoxious to his Luft to Word I sono A I fled from him as trembling Doves would by da W When the fierce Hawk purfues'em thro' the Sky The cruel Man at/me as swiftly flew, their motione A As ravenous Hawks the trembling Doves purfued of Fleet as himself, I many Leagues pass'd o're no A But he the long fatigue more frongly bore quality al Yet o're rough Hills and Rocks I forc'd my stap. Thro' Woods and Plains, which wild and pathlefa lay. dest my Kneer, all wholly frings I lay

I faw,

1

1

I

A

1

A

I faw, or thought I faw his Giant shade,
My fainting Steps with larger Strides invade;
I heard his Peet, his Breath too tols'd my Hair
With violent Flurries of a sultry Air.
Onite tird and faint. I'm catch'd, help, help! I cry'd
Diana, help one to thy Train ally'd!
On whom that Honour oft thou wouldst bestow,
To bearthy golden Shafts and sounding Bow!
The Goddess heard, and streight her Suppliant shrouds

M

M

A

NE

Y

oM

100 le!

Asa Wir

of I

a. A.

So e

MA

one

Wall Apa

7.

In an impervious Gloom of gathering Clouds;

Alphan fees and tries the Clouds around,

And twice unknowing my thin Shelter found;

Twice in his Quest on the same Cloud he falls,

And Arethuse, Ho Arethuse calls!

What Soul had I? What Lambs oppress with fear,

When near their Fold, the howling Wolves they hear;

Or Hares when from their Fourme the Hounds they

And huffi'd for fear, and almost breathless lye.

density are sended in the contract

144 METANORPHOSIS.

Yet the Alphane could no Steps descry,
He mark'd the Clouds still with a watchful Eye.
While thus besieg'd, cold Sweats my Heart surprize,

And thin blew Drops from every Member rife;
Where my Feet mov'd a Pool my Waters fill'd,
And from my Locks eternal Dews diffill'd,
A River I, quick as I speak, became,
But he ah cruel! with a lafting Flame
Pursued my Streams, lays by the useless Man,
Assumes his watry Shape, and streight began
To draw towards mine; when powerful Deligated

The gaping Earth, headlong my Stream descends,
Till thro'a thousand dark Meander's tost,
And almost in the gloomy windings lost.

I reach'd this Isle, from my dear Goddels nam'd,
Now for my Springs and wondrous Passage sam'd.

Here Arethusa ends, but Cores now
With kinder wishes and a smoother Brow;
Her Chariot mounts, where two huge Dragons Yok'd and obedient to her gentle Hand, (stand,

On

I

1

T

T

N

I

A

T

Fr

IÉ-

18

111 elis

ids,

'd.

d.

gons

and,

On

On their broad Sails thro' vielding Air they fly. Till Ceres fends her Chariot from the Sky To good Triptolemus her Athenian Friends Triptolemus whose useful Cares intend The Common Good; Seed was the Chariot's load. Which she on him for publick use bestow'd; Part the for Fallow-fields new plough'd defign'd. And part for Lands by frequent Tilth refin'd; Europe and Afia, now with Corn Supply'd ...... The Youth drives off to Scythia's Northern-fide Where Lyneus reign'd, right to his Court he goes! And there himself before the Tyrant shows; The Icalous Tyrant ask'd his Birth and Name. Whence first, and why to Septhian Realms he came? Athens, the Fam'd, first gave me Birth, said he; Triptolemus my Name; but not by Sea, Nor Land I come; but through the pervious Air With Ceres bleffings to your Realms repair. I bring rich Seeds, which in your Scythian Field A gallant Crop, and vast Increase will yield. The Envious Tyrant that himself might raise From fuch Invention an immortal Praise, Invites

246

Offers his Dagger at his harmless Breast;

But in that Ad a spotted Lynx was made.

When Ceres thence her Favourite convey'd

Thro the free Air to foreign happy Lands,

And left her Gifts in less ingrateful Hands.

The Mule here ends her Song, and all around
The Nymphs with Victory our Chorus crown'd.
But when the bold Parism Sifters grew
Stark Mad, and out in loud Abuses flew;
Since, faid Callione, you're not content
By daring Pride to merit Punishment,
(That you deserve, who durst with us contend)
But with foul Words our patient Ears offend.
Provok'd, our Thoughts to Penal Deeds must rife.
The Sifters with a foornful Smile despite Her threatning words; but when they tri'd to speak,

And their fiere Malice with their Nails to wreak, Beneath their Nails advancing Feathers forung, And on their Arms a longer Plumage hung:

hand femder mi

They

Invites

Th

T

Ar

No

Age 4.1 for to tuefs.

be. p.

w. p. w. p. 1, 8 They now each others horned Bills admire,
And grow themselves parts of the Sylvan Quire,
They tri'd to beat their Breasts, but when they try'd,

Their fluttering Wings the fofter Air divide: Now Pies, they keep their ancient Eloquence, And prate eternally without one word of Sense.

FINIS.

ERRATA

G.

to ak.

.

hey

DAge I. line 9. I. Pyrrha. 1. 12. I. Python. 1. 14. f. Oaken I. Beschen. p. 4. l. 10. r. Mountains. p. 8. l. 9. r. Virgin. p. 13. l. 11. r. Pairies. l. 12. Woody. p. 15. l. 11. after beil'd dele (3). p. 23. l. 20. t. Oracles. p. 30. l. for they'd be r. 'swould be. p. 35. l. 20. post Disturb and Deafen, dele 11. d for His r. their. p. 48. l. 29. r. Aglaures. p. 62. l. 5. r. fixed. p. 63. 4. for Her r. Their. p. 64. l. ult. for through r. threw, and dele (.). p. 65. 3. dele r in Aretholars. l. 4. for the r. their. p. 71. l. 5. r. Phosibula. 77. l. 11. dele moist, r. As when green Weeds. p. 98. l. 9. for Cold lies r. daes. p. 119. l. 17. for no r. now. p. 141. l. 19. r. Naiades. p. 158. l. 2. lyribene. l. 13. r. Minyadi. p. 116. l. 12. r. Leuconie. p. 175. l. 5. r. Albie. p. 188. l. 19. r. Stroke. p. 190. l. ult. r. Evoke. p. 199. l. 13. r. dd. p. 209. l. 11. r. Pallas. l. 20. for Her r. His. p. 219. l. 2 r. Man. l. 18. for And r. Whose. p. 224. l. ult. r. Whom Merchern Gales the &c. 219. l. 11. r. intreats. Besides some Errorainthe Pointing, which to Observing Reader may Cornel with his Pon.